IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 16A1191

DONALD J. TRUMP, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, ET AL., APPLICANTS

v.

STATE OF HAWAII, ET AL.

SUPPLEMENTAL MEMORANDUM
IN SUPPORT OF APPLICATION FOR STAY PENDING APPEAL AND PENDING DISPOSITION OF PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

On June 1, 2017, applicants President Donald J. Trump et al. sought a stay of the preliminary injunction pending appeal to the Ninth Circuit and any further proceedings in this Court. The government noted that the Court could construe the stay application as a petition for a writ of certiorari before judgment and grant review in this case and in Trump v. IRAP, No. 16-1436. Stay Appl. 6, 17. Respondents agreed that if the Court grants certiorari in IRAP, it should "grant certiorari" in this case as well "so that the cases may be heard together." Opp. 3.

On June 12, 2017, the court of appeals issued its decision affirming in part and vacating in part. Supplemental Addendum (Supp. Add.) 1-78. The court overturned certain portions of the injunction involving internal-review procedures, but it upheld the remainder -- based not on the Establishment Clause rationale the district court had adopted, but on statutory grounds. That ruling cements the need for this Court's review and for a stay. The government therefore respectfully requests that the Court construe its stay application as a petition for a writ of certiorari, grant certiorari so that this case may be considered in tandem with IRAP, and stay the remaining portions of the injunction pending the final disposition of the case.

Although the court of appeals correctly vacated aspects of the injunction, the portions it left in place still nullify a national-security directive of the President and still sweep much further than the injunction in IRAP. And although the court did not adopt respondents' Establishment Clause rationale, it relied instead on even more novel and extraordinary statutory grounds. Indeed, it principally held that courts may second-guess the President's assessment of the national interest under 8 U.S.C. 1182(f) -- a position that respondents themselves did not advance below. By preventing the President from effectuating his national-security judgment, the injunction will continue to cause irreparable harm to the government and the public. The injunction should be stayed, and certiorari should be granted.

STATEMENT

The court of appeals expressly declined to reach respondents' Establishment Clause challenge to Executive Order No. 13,780, 82 Fed. Reg. 13,209 (Mar. 9, 2017) (Order). Supp. Add. 15. It addressed only whether the Order complies with the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA), 8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq. Supp. Add. 16-60. The court held that Dr. Elshikh and Hawaii have standing to challenge Sections 2 and 6, their claims are ripe and fall within the zone of interests protected by the statute, and their claims are not barred by consular nonreviewability. Id. at 16-32.

On the merits, the court of appeals primarily held that three provisions -- Section 2(c)'s 90-day suspension of entry of nationals from six countries, Section 6(a)'s 120-day suspension of adjudications and travel under the U.S. Refugee Admission Program, and Section 6(b)'s reduction of the maximum number of refugees who may be admitted in Fiscal Year 2017 -- likely exceed the President's authority under 8 U.S.C. 1182(f). Supp. Add. 33-48. The court acknowledged that the President has authority under Section 1182(f) to "suspend the entry of all aliens or any class of aliens as immigrants or nonimmigrants" "[w]hensoever the President finds that" such entry "would be detrimental to the interests of the United States." Id. at 34 (quoting 8 U.S.C. 1182(f)). But it concluded that "[t]here is no sufficient finding in [the Order] that the entry of the excluded classes would be detrimental to the interests of the United States." Id. at 36.

The court of appeals also held that Section 2(c) likely violates 8 U.S.C. 1152(a)(1)(A), which bars "discriminat[ing]" or granting a "preference or priority" in the "issuance of an immigrant visa because of," inter alia, an alien's "nationality."

See Supp. Add. 48. The court held that, although Section 1152(a)(1)(A) addresses only issuance of visas, it also “cabins the President’s authority under [Section] 1182(f)” to restrict entry of aliens. Id. at 52; see id. at 48-56. And although Section 1152(a)(1)(A) does not address nonimmigrant visas, the court declined to limit the injunction to immigrant visas. Id. at 73 n.24.

In addition, the court of appeals held that Section 6(b)’s lowering of the refugee cap for Fiscal Year 2017 to 50,000 violates 8 U.S.C. 1157. Supp. Add. 56-60; see id. at 47 n.18 (noting that as of May 31, 2017, 46,403 refugees had been admitted in Fiscal Year 2017). Section 1157 authorizes the President, in consultation with congressional leadership, to establish at the start of each fiscal year the maximum number of refugees who may be admitted. The court held that the President could not direct that a lower number be permitted to enter. Id. at 56-60.

The court of appeals also held that respondents are likely to suffer irreparable harm that is not outweighed by the injury to the government, and that the public interest supports an injunction. Supp. Add. 63-69. The court further declined to limit the injunction to respondents themselves. Id. at 73-75. The court held, however, that the district court had abused its discretion in enjoining “the internal review procedures” of Sections 2 and 6 and in enjoining the President himself. Id. at 69-72, 76. The court denied the government’s request for a stay. Id. at 78 n.25.

ARGUMENT

The court of appeals' decision confirms that certiorari and a stay are warranted. First, the decision below upholds an injunction barring enforcement of a national-security directive of the President, based on an unprecedented view of the President's authority over the Nation's borders and on the court of appeals' overt disagreement with his assessment of national-security risks. Second, there is at the very least a fair prospect that this Court will reverse the court of appeals' decision and vacate the injunction in whole or in part. Like respondents' Establishment Clause claim, their statutory challenges are both nonjusticiable and meritless. Third, the injunction, even as modified, will continue to cause irreparable injury to the government and the public, and it is not necessary to redress any irreparable injury to respondents. At a minimum, the injunction impermissibly extends far beyond redressing any cognizable harm to respondents.

I. THERE IS A REASONABLE PROBABILITY THAT THIS COURT WILL GRANT CERTIORARI

Respondents have not seriously disputed that the questions presented by this case warrant review. Stay Appl. 18-19. Even before the Ninth Circuit's ruling, respondents "d[id] not dispute the fundamental importance of the underlying legal issues" presented, including "the statutory and constitutional limits of Executive power." Opp. 11. And they agreed (Opp. 3, 40) that, if the Court grants review in Trump v. IRAP, No. 16-1436, it also should grant certiorari in this case and consider both cases together.

Now that the Ninth Circuit has upheld injunctive relief even broader than the injunction in IRAP, there is no doubt that review is appropriate. Even as narrowed by the court of appeals, the injunction here nullifies multiple provisions of an Executive Order issued by the President pursuant to his inherent and express statutory authority to safeguard national security. In addition to Section 2(c)'s 90-day suspension of entry, the decision below upholds injunctive relief against Section 6(a)'s 120-day suspension of the Refugee Program, as well as Section 6(b)'s reduction in the maximum number of refugees who may enter in Fiscal Year 2017, a provision respondents never specifically challenged in seeking a temporary restraining order (TRO).

Moreover, the Ninth Circuit did not enjoin those provisions based on the Establishment Clause, as the district court here and the Fourth Circuit in IRAP did. Instead, it held that the President exceeded his express authority to suspend entry of aliens abroad under 8 U.S.C. 1182(f), because in the court's view the President's factual findings were not sufficient to justify the temporary suspension. Supp. Add. 35-46. Respondents themselves did not press that theory in the court of appeals, and to the government's knowledge, no court has ever adopted it. That holding sweeps far beyond the circumstances of this case, and if left undisturbed it threatens to hamstring the Executive in safeguarding the Nation's borders.

II. THERE IS A FAIR PROSPECT THAT THIS COURT WILL SET ASIDE THE DECISION BELOW

Respondents' statutory claims are not justiciable and are meritless. And their opposition does nothing to rehabilitate their Establishment Clause claim that the court of appeals did not reach.

A. Respondents' Statutory Claims Are Not Justiciable

1. At the outset, respondents' statutory challenges are foreclosed by the general rule barring judicial review of the denial of entry to aliens abroad. See Saavedra Bruno v. Albright, 197 F.3d 1153, 1158-1160 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (collecting cases). This Court has twice undertaken review, albeit under a highly deferential standard, when a U.S. citizen asserted that exclusion of an alien violated the citizen's own constitutional rights, but that limited exception does not encompass statutory claims. See Stay Appl. 20-21; Cert. Reply Br. at 10, Trump v. IRAP, No. 16-1436 (June 14, 2017) (IRAP Cert. Reply). The court of appeals cited no authority for permitting statutory challenges by U.S. citizens to the denial of entry to aliens abroad.¹

The court of appeals also asserted that the general rule of nonreviewability applies only where a plaintiff "seek[s] review of an individual consular officer's decision to grant or to deny a visa pursuant to valid regulations," but not to "promulgation of sweeping immigration policy." Supp. Add. 30-31 (emphasis and citation omitted). A plaintiff cannot circumvent the preclusion of review, however, by bringing a premature suit contending that a ground on which a visa might be denied in the future is not permitted by the statute. Moreover, decisions to exclude aliens are "largely immune from judicial control" because the Constitution assigns "the power to expel or exclude aliens" to "the Government's political departments." Fiallo v. Bell, 430 U.S. 787, 792 (1977). The doctrine thus applies with the utmost force to decisions by the head of the Executive Branch.

2. Beyond this preclusion of review, neither Dr. Elshikh nor Hawaii has identified any cognizable injury traceable to the alleged statutory violations. Dr. Elshikh alleges that the Order sends a "message" (Opp. 14) condemning his religion, but that basis for his Establishment Clause claim has nothing to do with his statutory claim, and in any event is not even a cognizable injury. Pet. for Cert. at 17-20, Trump v. IRAP, No. 16-1436 (June 1, 2017) (IRAP Cert. Pet.). Contrary to the court of appeals' reasoning, 919 (1983), involved an alien who was already present in the United States, and addressed whether a procedure permitting one House of Congress to veto Executive deportation decisions complies with bicameralism and presentment.

Supp. Add. 18-19, Dr. Elshikh cannot assert injury based on a possible effect on mother-in-law's visa application: he is not her petitioner; his wife is, but she is not a party to this litigation. Stay Appl. Add. 46. And he has no injury from Section 6's refugee provisions: his mother-in-law seeks a visa, not refugee admission. Ibid.

That leaves only Dr. Elshikh's allegation that his mother-in-law might be delayed in entering the country. Supp. Add. 19-20. As the government has maintained from the outset, no such injury was imminent when the operative complaint was filed. D. Ct. Doc. 145, at 21-22 (Mar. 13, 2017). Respondents themselves now say that Dr. Elshikh's mother-in-law has been informed that processing of her visa application will likely extend until July 2017 -- well after the original 90-day suspension would have expired if it had not been enjoined. Opp. 14. Respondents' assertion (ibid.) that Section 2(c), "if it goes into effect, would block her entry into the United States" is beside the point. Standing is measured as of the commencement of the action. See Davis v. FEC, 554 U.S. 724, 732-733 (2008). Respondents cannot bootstrap their way into standing because they obtained an injunction that delayed the commencement of Section 2(c)'s suspension.

In any event, even assuming Dr. Elshikh's mother-in-law would ultimately be found otherwise eligible to obtain a visa, there is no final agency action, and his asserted injury is not ripe because his mother-in-law may obtain a waiver as a close family member who seeks to reside with her daughter. Stay Appl. 21-22; Order § 3(c)(iv). The court of appeals deemed that prospect irrelevant because the "waiver is discretionary" and "[t]he waiver provision" does not "guarantee[] that waivers will be granted." Supp. Add. 29. That turns the justiciability analysis upside-down: the fact that Dr. Elshikh's claimed injury hinges on "contingent future events that may not occur," Texas v. United States, 523 U.S. 296, 300 (1998) (citation omitted), until a consular officer actually passes upon her visa and waiver application, means that his claim is not ripe.

Hawaii's claims fail for the same reasons. The only purported injuries to Hawaii on which the court of appeals relied are likewise speculative. The court held that the State's university system will be harmed as prospective students are unable to enter the country. Supp. Add. 20-23. But when it filed its complaint, Hawaii identified no student who would be delayed in entering. Gov't C.A. Br. 22-23. On appeal, Hawaii asserted -- based on new evidence -- that some graduate students have since received and accepted admission and would arrive in August 2017, long after the 90-day suspension would have expired but for the injunctions in this case and in IRAP. C.A. Doc. 307-2, ¶¶ 3-4 (May 19, 2017). These alleged post-complaint developments are irrelevant to standing. See p. 9, supra. Regardless, nothing in the INA supports the notion that a public university has a cognizable right to compel the entry of an alien abroad in these circumstances.²

The court of appeals also held that Hawaii is harmed in "carrying out its refugee policies," which "hinders the exercise of its sovereign power to enforce its laws." Supp. Add. 23-24. Hawaii has no sovereign or other cognizable interest in regulating or compelling the entry of aliens abroad, because "[t]he authority to control immigration -- to admit or exclude aliens -- is vested solely in the Federal Government." Arizona v. United States, 567 U.S. 387, 409-410 (citation omitted); see Air Courier Conference v. American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO, 498 U.S. 517, 524 (1991). A State's "sovereign power over individuals and entities within [its] jurisdiction" and its corresponding "power to create and enforce a legal code," Supp. Add. 24 (quoting Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico ex rel. Barez, 458 U.S. 592, 601 (1982)), does not extend to aliens abroad who have not first been admitted.

B. Respondents' Statutory Claims Are Meritless

1. Sections 2(c), 6(a), and 6(b) are consistent with 8 U.S.C. 1182(f)

The court of appeals' principal holding -- and the only ground that could support all remaining portions of the injunction -- is that Sections 2(c), 6(a), and 6(b) likely exceed the President's suspension authority under 8 U.S.C. 1182(f) because, in the court's view, the President failed to make a sufficient finding of harm to the national interest. Supp. Add. 33-48. Respondents never advanced that novel theory in the court of appeals. Resps. C.A. Br. 26-42. And for good reason: it has no basis in the statute or historical practice, and it improperly disregards the Order's express findings.

a. Section 1182(f) provides in pertinent part:

Whenever the President finds that the entry of any aliens or of any class of aliens into the United States would be detrimental to the interests of the United States, he may by proclamation, and for such period as he shall deem necessary, suspend the entry of all aliens or any class of aliens as immigrants or nonimmigrants, or impose on the entry of aliens any restrictions he may deem to be appropriate.

8 U.S.C. 1182(f). By its terms, Section 1182(f) grants the President exceedingly broad discretion, authorizing him to suspend "by proclamation" entry of "any" or "all" aliens "as immigrants or nonimmigrants" for such time he "deem[s] necessary" or to restrict their entry as he "deem[s] to be appropriate," "[w]hensoever" he "finds" that their entry would be "detrimental to the interests of the United States." Ibid. The breadth of that authorization reflects that, "[w]hen Congress prescribes a procedure concerning the admissibility of aliens, it is not dealing alone with a legislative power," but also "is implementing an inherent executive power." United States ex rel. Knauff v. Shaughnessy, 338 U.S. 537, 542 (1950). As courts have long recognized, Section 1182(f) confers a "sweeping proclamation power" to suspend entry of aliens. Abourezk v. Reagan, 785 F.2d 1043, 1049 n.2 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (R.B. Ginsburg, J.), aff'd by an equally divided Court, 484 U.S. 1 (1987); see Allende v. Shultz, 845 F.2d 1111, 1117-1118 (1st Cir. 1988).

The court of appeals read into that provision a requirement that, before suspending entry, the President must articulate a factual finding -- satisfactory to courts -- that "support[s] the conclusion that entry of all nationals" whose entry he suspends "would be harmful to the national interest." Supp. Add. 36. That requirement turns the statute's text on its head. The statute's language authorizing the President to suspend or restrict entry "[w]henver [he] finds that the entry of any aliens or of any class of aliens into the United States would be detrimental to the interests of the United States," 8 U.S.C. 1182(f), does not constrain his authority, but confirms its expansive sweep. Congress placed no restrictions on which "interests" count or what "detriment[s]" suffice for the President to invoke his authority, committing all of those matters to the President's judgment and discretion. And the statute expressly contemplates that he may make these determinations on a broad scale, authorizing him to "suspend the entry of all aliens or any class of aliens." Ibid.

The only prerequisite Congress imposed is that the "President find[]" entry of some or all aliens would be detrimental to the Nation's interests, 8 U.S.C. 1182(f), irrespective of whether a court would so find. In Webster v. Doe, 486 U.S. 592 (1987), confronted with a statute that similarly granted the CIA Director authority to terminate employees if he "deem[ed] such termination necessary or advisable in the interests of the United States," this Court held that judicial review of termination decisions was unavailable under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) because the Court "s[aw] no basis on which a reviewing court could properly assess an Agency termination decision." Id. at 600 (citation omitted). So too here, Section 1182(f) "fairly exudes deference to the [President]" and "appears to foreclose * * * the application of any meaningful judicial standard of review." Ibid. Indeed, the President's decisions are not "reviewable for abuse of discretion under the APA" at all. Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 800-801 (1992); Dalton v. Specter, 511 U.S. 462, 474-476 (1994) (courts may not second-guess determinations vested in the President's discretion).

The President generally need not "disclose" his "reasons for deeming nationals of a particular country a special threat," Reno v. American-Arab Anti-Discrim. Comm., 525 U.S. 471, 491 (1999), which may rest on classified or sensitive material. And when the President does disclose his reasons for deeming certain nationals to present a risk to national security, courts are "ill equipped to determine their authenticity and utterly unable to assess their adequacy." Ibid. The court of appeals therefore seriously erred in holding that Section 1182(f) subjects the President's assessment of harm to the Nation's interests to judicial review, under a standard of the court's creation akin to review of agency action under the APA.

b. Historical practice further refutes the court of appeals' misreading of the statute. Presidential orders dating back decades have invoked Section 1182(f) to suspend or restrict entry without any detailed finding that entry of particular aliens would be detrimental to this Nation -- often explaining the President's rationale in one or two sentences that broadly declare the Nation's interests.³ Indeed, as the court of appeals acknowledged, some orders have suspended or restricted entry "not because of a particular concern that entry of the individuals themselves would be detrimental, but rather, as retaliatory diplomatic measures." Supp. Add. 40 n.13 (emphases added); see, e.g., Proclamation No. 5517, 51 Fed. Reg. 30,470 (Aug. 26, 1986) (suspending entry of "all Cuban nationals," with certain exceptions, based on Cuban government's decision to suspend execution of an immigration agreement with this Nation). This practice confirms the breadth of the President's authority and the wide latitude the statute accords him to determine, in his discretion, that suspending entry is in the national interest.

³ See, e.g., Proclamation No. 8693, 76 Fed. Reg. 44,751 (July 27, 2011); Proclamation No. 8342, 74 Fed. Reg. 4093 (Jan. 22, 2009); Proclamation No. 6958, 61 Fed. Reg. 60,007 (Nov. 26, 1996); Exec. Order No. 12,807, 57 Fed. Reg. 23,133 (June 1, 1992); Proclamation No. 5887, 53 Fed. Reg. 43,185 (Oct. 26, 1988); Proclamation No. 5829, 53 Fed. Reg. 22,289 (June 14, 1988).

c. The Order amply satisfies any requirement Section 1182(f) imposes. Section 2(c)'s entry suspension -- the provision respondents principally challenged below -- is supported by extensive findings set forth in the Order concerning the national-security risks the six countries present. The fact that each country "is a state sponsor of terrorism, has been significantly compromised by terrorist organizations, or contains active conflict zones," both (1) creates a heightened risk that "conditions will be exploited to enable terrorist operatives or sympathizers to travel to the United States" and thereafter may be difficult to "remove," and (2) "diminishes the foreign government's willingness or ability to share or validate important information about individuals seeking to travel to the United States." Order § 1(d).

After detailing the deteriorating conditions in each country, Order § 1(e), the Order concludes that, "until the assessment of current screening and vetting procedures required by [S]ection 2" is completed, "the risk of erroneously permitting entry of a national of one of these countries who intends to commit terrorist acts or otherwise harm the national security of the United States is unacceptably high," id. § 1(f). On that basis -- and to reduce investigative burdens while the review of existing procedures is ongoing -- the Order determines that entry from the six countries (absent an individual waiver) "would be detrimental to the interests of the United States." Id. § 2(c). Simply put, in the face of uncertainty over whether these foreign governments that sponsor or shelter terrorism are able and willing to provide needed information, the President placed a 90-day pause on entry of their nationals (subject to case-by-case waivers) while the Departments of State and Homeland Security review existing procedures. Under any standard of review, that action -- and the findings on which it is based -- readily pass muster.

The Refugee Program suspension and refugee cap similarly rest on the President's determination that those measures are justified by the national interest. As the Order explains, the prior Executive Order it replaced "temporarily suspended the [Refugee Program] pending a review of our procedures for screening and vetting refugees" in light of the fact that "[t]errorist groups have sought to infiltrate several nations through refugee programs." Order § 1(b)(iii). The Order notes that "more than 300 persons who entered the United States as refugees are currently the subjects of counterterrorism investigations by the Federal Bureau of Investigation" and some have been "convicted of terrorism-related crimes." Id. § 1(h). And it reduces the maximum number of refugees who may be admitted in Fiscal Year 2017 based on an express finding that entry of more than 50,000 "would be detrimental to the interests of the United States." Id. § 6(b).

d. The court of appeals dismissed all of these determinations as insufficient, and in doing so substituted its own assessment of national-security risks for the Executive's. Supp. Add. 37-48.

i. The court deemed the national-security justification for Section 2(c)'s entry suspension inadequate because the Order does not find "that nationality alone renders entry of" the covered individuals "a heightened security risk" -- for example, by "t[ying] these nationals" to "terrorist organizations," "identify[ing] these nationals as contributors to active conflict," or showing a "link between an individual's nationality and their propensity to commit terrorism." Supp. Add. 38-39. The court's reasoning fundamentally misunderstands the basis for the Order. The President is uncertain whether certain foreign governments -- especially those that sponsor or shelter terrorism -- are able and willing to provide sufficiently complete and reliable information to "tie" particular foreign nationals to "terrorist organizations," "identify" them "as contributors to active conflict," or establish a "link" between them and "their propensity to commit terrorism." In light of that uncertainty, and the accompanying risk that our government might fail to detect a terrorist threat, the President determined that placing a 90-day pause on entry of nationals from these countries (subject to individualized waivers) is appropriate to avoid detriments to the national interest. Order § 1(d).

One purpose of that temporary pause -- and the accompanying review and report that the President instructed the Secretaries of Homeland Security and State and the Director of National Intelligence to undertake, Order § 2(a) and (b) -- is to gather the information that the court of appeals faulted the President for not already possessing. The court's decision limits the authority of a newly elected Executive to adjudge for itself whether the information provided by certain foreign governments is adequate to permit the detection of threats to the Nation. It is no answer to say that the Order is overinclusive and underinclusive, because it encompasses nationals who currently lack significant ties to their home countries, while omitting aliens who are not nationals of but have close ties to the listed countries. Supp. Add. 41-42. The President's concern was the willingness and ability of certain foreign governments to provide information about their own nationals.

The court of appeals deemed that concern insufficient to justify Section 2(c) because the Order did not affirmatively find that existing information-sharing procedures are in fact inadequate. Supp. Add. 41-42. In the court's view, the government currently has sufficient tools at its disposal to ensure the reliability of such information. Ibid. But Section 1182(f) plainly permits the President to suspend or restrict entry based on risks he perceives, without waiting for them to become reality. The President's "[p]redictive judgment[s]" warrant the utmost deference. Department of the Navy v. Egan, 484 U.S. 518, 527-529 (1988). Especially "when it comes to collecting evidence and drawing factual inferences" in the national-security context, "the lack of competence on the part of the courts is marked, and respect for the Government's conclusions is appropriate." Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project, 561 U.S. 1, 34 (2010) (HLP) (citation omitted).

ii. The court of appeals gave equally short shrift to the Order's assessment of risks related to Section 6's refugee provisions, which respondents barely mentioned in the district court. It stated that the Order "does not reveal any threat or harm to warrant suspension of" the Refugee Program or find that "present vetting and screening procedures are inadequate," and the Order's stated goal of facilitating a review "do[es] not support a finding that the travel and admission of refugees would be detrimental to the interests of the United States." Supp. Add. 45-46. But again, one purpose of the Order is to allow review to ensure adequate screening is in place, and it expressly notes that "[t]errorist groups have sought to infiltrate several nations through refugee programs" and that "more than 300 persons who entered the United States as refugees are currently the subjects of counterterrorism investigations by the Federal Bureau of Investigation," some of whom have been "convicted of terrorism-related crimes." Order § 1(b)(iii) and (h).

In addition, the court of appeals believed that the Order fails to give any reason for limiting the number of refugees to 50,000. Supp. Add. 47. But after reciting the number of refugee-related counterterrorism investigations, the Order expressly states "that the entry of more than 50,000 refugees in fiscal year 2017 would be detrimental to the interests of the United States." Order § 6(b). Nothing more is required. The court apparently believed that Section 6(b) is invalid because, having already recited refugee-related risks, it does not provide sufficient detail why those refugee-related risks justify a cap of 50,000 refugees. That is not the proper judicial role in reviewing such Executive action. When the Executive adopts "a preventive measure * * * in the context of international affairs and national security," it "is not required to conclusively link all the pieces in the puzzle before [courts] grant weight to its empirical conclusions." HLP, 561 U.S. at 35. All Section 1182(f) required is that the President find that entry of more than 50,000 refugees would be "detrimental" to the Nation's interests. That is precisely what he did.

2. Section 2(c) is consistent with 8 U.S.C. 1152

The court of appeals also held that Section 2(c)'s entry suspension of nationals from six countries violates 8 U.S.C. 1152(a)(1)(A), which prohibits "discriminat[ing]" or granting a "preference or priority" in the "issuance of an immigrant visa because of," inter alia, an alien's "nationality." Ibid. As the government explained in its briefing below, that is incorrect, and even on the court of appeals' reading, Section 1152(a)(1)(A) could not support the injunction. Gov't C.A. Reply Br. 21-24.

Section 1182(f) expressly authorizes the President to suspend or restrict entry of "any class of aliens," and the Executive historically has exercised that power to exclude entry based on nationality. Gov't C.A. Reply Br. 22. This Court has deemed it "perfectly clear that [Section] 1182(f) * * * grants the President ample power to establish a naval blockade that would simply deny illegal Haitian migrants the ability to disembark on our shores." Sale v. Haitian Centers Council, Inc., 509 U.S. 155, 187 (1993). That Section 2(c)'s entry suspension is implemented by withholding visas from aliens who do not qualify for a waiver does not violate Section 1152(a)(1)(A). Given that the President can suspend entry of aliens "as immigrants or nonimmigrants," 8 U.S.C. 1182(f), including based on nationality, Section 1152(a)(1)(A) cannot be construed to require that aliens validly barred from entry be issued a visa permitting them to travel to the United States -- only to be denied entry upon arrival.

The court of appeals, however, held that Section 1152(a)(1)(A) "cabins the President's authority under [Section] 1182(f)" to suspend entry. Supp. Add. 51-52. The statutes do not conflict, but even if they did, Section 1182(f) would govern. The court's contrary approach requires reading Section 1152(a)(1)(A) as partially "repeal[ing]" Section 1182(f) by "implication," which courts will not do unless Congress's "intention" is "clear" and "manifest." National Ass'n of Home Builders v. Defenders of Wildlife, 551 U.S. 644, 662, 664 n.8 (2007) (citation omitted).

And it raises serious constitutional questions the Court must avoid if possible. See Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Florida Gulf Coast Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 575 (1988). The court of appeals' holding means that, as a statutory matter, the President cannot suspend the entry of aliens from any country, even if he is aware of a particular threat from an unidentified national of that country or the United States is on the brink of war with that country.

Even if the court of appeals' approach were correct, it still would not justify the existing injunction against Section 2(c). Section 1152(a)(1)(A) by its terms concerns only the "issuance of * * * immigrant visa[s]." It does not purport to compel the President to permit entry of an alien whom he has determined should be excluded in the national interest under Section 1182(f). Moreover, as the district court in IRAP v. Trump recognized, Section 1152(a)(1)(A) is further limited to immigrant visas. No. 17-361, 2017 WL 1018235, at *10 (D. Md. Mar. 16, 2017). It has no bearing on the large number of aliens from the six countries who seek nonimmigrant visas, and it thus cannot support the injunction the court of appeals upheld against every application of Section 2(c).

3. Section 6(b) is consistent with 8 U.S.C. 1157

The court of appeals also incorrectly held that Section 6(b)'s reduction of the refugee cap for Fiscal Year 2017, which respondents barely addressed below, violates 8 U.S.C. 1157. Supp.

Add. 56-60. Section 1157 establishes a procedure for setting the maximum number of refugees who may be admitted each fiscal year. 8 U.S.C. 1157(a)(2). It provides that "the number of refugees who may be admitted" in any fiscal year "shall be such number as the President determines, before the beginning of the fiscal year and after appropriate consultation." Ibid. (emphasis added). The statute prescribes a process for "appropriate consultation" involving in-person meetings among Cabinet-level officials and congressional leaders. 8 U.S.C. 1157(e). If an "unforeseen emergency refugee situation" arises mid-year, the President may (after "appropriate consultation") set a higher maximum. 8 U.S.C. 1157(b).

The court of appeals held that Section 6(b) violates Section 1157 because the maximum number of refugees for Fiscal Year was previously set at 110,000, and Section 6(b) reduced that number without "appropriate consultation." Supp. Add. 56-60. But Section 1157(a)(2) sets only the number who "may be admitted," not the number who must be admitted. Although the President cannot increase mid-year the number of refugees who may be admitted without "appropriate consultation," nothing in the statute requires that the maximum number of refugees set at the beginning of the fiscal year actually be admitted or prohibits the President from allowing only a smaller number. That makes perfect sense: Congress wanted refugee admissions to be limited, with its leadership involved in setting an annual ceiling on refugee admissions and deciding whether to exceed that limit mid-year due to unanticipated events.⁴ But a smaller number may be admitted for many reasons, such as budgetary constraints, logistical concerns, or foreign-relations issues. The number of refugees actually admitted frequently falls well below the predetermined cap.⁵ And it would make no sense for Congress to mandate that a fixed number of refugees be admitted if the President determines, under Section 1182(f) or otherwise, that the national interest requires reducing that figure.

The court of appeals misconstrued Section 1157(a) to set not only a ceiling on refugee admissions, but also a "floor." Supp. Add. 57. The court stated that "the number of refugees who may be admitted shall be the number determined by the President" after appropriate consultation, ibid., but it glossed over the critical discretionary language: "may be admitted." The court also asserted that a contrary view would render Section 1157's procedures superfluous, ibid., but that is untrue: if the President wants to increase the ceiling mid-year, he must utilize Section 1157's protocol.

The court of appeals finally asserted that Section 1157 supersedes Section 1182(f) because it is later in time and more specific. Supp. Add. 58-59. Those attributes are immaterial because the provisions do not conflict. Section 1182(f) authorizes the President to suspend or restrict entry. That is entirely consistent with Section 1157, which merely sets a cap on refugee admissions.⁶

C. Respondents' Establishment Clause Claim Is Meritless

In the courts below and in their stay opposition, respondents urged upholding the injunction on Establishment Clause grounds. Opp. 19-27. As the government has shown, that constitutional challenge is not justiciable and lacks merit. Stay Appl. 20-33. Respondents' opposition casts no doubt on those conclusions.

1. Respondents assert that their Establishment Clause claim is justiciable, Opp. 19, but they never explain how the Order's application to aliens abroad violates respondents' own rights under that Clause. The Order does not apply to Dr. Elshikh at all. Stay Appl. 21-22. And Hawaii has no Establishment Clause rights to assert here. Id. at 21; see Gov't C.A. Reply Br. 5.

2. Respondents contend that Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U.S. 753 (1972), is inapplicable to broad policy decisions, and applies only to a “decision to exclude an individual alien.” Opp. 20. This Court has held otherwise. See, e.g., Fiallo, 430 U.S. at 792-794; Stay Appl. 26. And the notion that a court “cannot look behind the decision of a consular officer” in an individual case, “but can examine the decision of the President[,] stands the separation of powers on its head.” Amended Order, Washington v. Trump, No. 17-35105 (9th Cir. Mar. 17, 2017), slip op. 13 (Bybee, J., dissenting from denial of reconsideration en banc).

Respondents do not deny that Mandel’s “facially legitimate and bona fide” standard entails only “minimal scrutiny (rational-basis review).” Sessions v. Morales-Santana, No. 15-1191 (June 12, 2017), slip op. 15. They reprise their argument that Mandel’s “bona fide” language means courts “must be permitted to look behind a national security rationale” in search of pretext. Opp. 23. But that is precisely what Mandel rejected. 408 U.S. at 770; Stay Appl. 27. Such an inquiry into subjective motivations is also inconsistent with Kerry v. Din, 135 S. Ct. 2128 (2015). For the reasons set forth in the government’s briefs in IRAP, neither Mandel nor Din provides any basis for respondents’ Establishment Clause claim. IRAP Cert. Pet. 20-26; IRAP Cert. Reply 6-8. Respondents’ assertion (Opp. 24-27) that their Establishment Clause claim would succeed under domestic case law is similarly meritless. Stay Appl. 28-33; IRAP Cert. Reply 8-10.

III. THE BALANCE OF EQUITIES DECISIVELY FAVORS A STAY

As the government has demonstrated, the balance of equities weighs in favor of a stay. Stay Appl. 33-36. Even as narrowed by the Ninth Circuit, the injunction in this case still sweeps beyond the injunction at issue in IRAP and interferes with the President's judgments regarding how to discharge his constitutional and statutory duty to protect the Nation.

A. Respondents assert (Opp. 33) that the government's purported delay in litigating shows it suffers no irreparable harm. But the government has moved with dispatch at every step. The President issued the revised Order less than three weeks after the government informed the Ninth Circuit that he intended to do so -- hardly an unreasonable length of time for an interagency process that culminated in a revised Order reflecting material substantive changes and detailed factual findings. When the district court entered the TRO, the government did not immediately appeal because proceedings regarding whether and on what terms to convert the TRO to an appealable preliminary injunction were still ongoing. It cannot be faulted for asking the court to clarify and narrow the scope of relief before converting the TRO to an appealable injunction -- especially because the court itself requested briefing on the conversion, and the Ninth Circuit ultimately held that the injunction was overbroad. Supp. Add. 69-72, 76.

Once the injunction was issued, the government promptly appealed and sought a stay and expedited briefing. Gov't C.A. Stay Reply Br. 3-4. It sought to brief the merits and its stay request simultaneously because of the complexity of the issues and the need for definitive resolution. Ibid. Respondents cite no case in which this Court (or one of its Members) has deemed such expedited litigation to be dilatory.⁷

B. Respondents also assert (Opp. 37) that the injunction leaves the government free to take other action to improve screening and vetting. But the President is entitled to take more than one measure to protect the Nation. And the other steps that respondents identify do not address the same concerns as Section 2(c). For example, respondents note (ibid.) that the Department of State is implementing new screening procedures requiring certain visa applicants to provide additional information to consular officers. See 82 Fed. Reg. 20,956 (May 4, 2017). Seeking additional information from visa applicants themselves addresses a concern different from, and is not an adequate substitute for, ensuring that foreign governments are willing and able to "share or validate important information about individuals seeking to travel to the United States." Order § 1(d).

C. At a minimum, the Court should stay the injunction because even as narrowed it goes far beyond redressing violations of respondents' own rights. Stay Appl. 37-40. Respondents identify no cognizable, irreparable harm caused by application of the enjoined provisions to persons other than Dr. Elshikh's mother-in-law, even assuming, arguendo, that Dr. Elshikh has a cognizable and ripe claim to that extent.

CONCLUSION

The Court should construe the government's stay application as a petition for a writ of certiorari and grant the petition along with the petition for a writ of certiorari in IRAP. In addition, the Court should stay the injunction in its entirety pending disposition of the petition and any further proceedings in this Court. At a minimum, it should stay the injunction as to all persons other than Dr. Elshikh's mother-in-law.

Respectfully submitted.

OPINION¹

PER CURIAM:

We are asked to delineate the statutory and constitutional limits to the President's power to control immigration in this appeal of the district court's order preliminarily enjoining two sections of Executive Order 13780 ("EO2" or "the Order"), "Protecting the Nation From Foreign Terrorist Entry Into the United States." The Immigration and Nationality Act ("INA") gives the President broad powers to control the entry of aliens, and to take actions to protect the American public. But immigration, even for the President, is not a one-person show. The President's authority is subject to certain statutory and constitutional restraints. We conclude that the President, in issuing the Executive Order, exceeded the scope of the authority delegated to him by Congress. In suspending the entry of more than 180 million nationals from six countries, suspending the entry of all refugees, and reducing the cap on the admission of refugees from 110,000 to 50,000 for the 2017 fiscal year, the President did not meet the essential precondition to exercising his delegated authority: The President must make a sufficient finding that the entry of these classes of people would be "detrimental to the interests of the United States." Further, the Order runs afoul of other provisions of the INA that prohibit nationality-based discrimination and require the President to follow a specific process when setting the annual cap on the admission of refugees. On these statutory bases, we affirm in large part the district court's order preliminarily enjoining Sections 2 and 6 of the Executive Order.

One week after inauguration and without interagency review, President Donald J. Trump issued Executive Order 13769 ("EO1"). Exec. Order No. 13769, 82 Fed. Reg. 8977 (Jan. 27, 2017).² Entitled "Protecting the Nation From Foreign Terrorist Entry Into the United States," EO1's stated purpose was to "protect the American people from terrorist attacks by foreign nationals admitted to the United States." Id. EO1 recited that "[n]umerous foreign-born individuals have been convicted or implicated in terrorism-related crimes since September 11, 2001, including foreign nationals who entered the United States after receiving visitor, student, or employment visas, or who entered through the United States refugee resettlement program." Id.

EO1 mandated two main courses of action to assure that the United States remain "vigilant during the visa-issuance process to ensure that those approved for admission do not intend to harm Americans and that they have no ties to terrorism.” Id. In Section 3, the President invoked his authority under 8 U.S.C. § 1182(f) to suspend for 90 days immigrant and nonimmigrant entry into the United States of nationals from seven majority-Muslim countries: Iraq, Iran, Libya, Sudan, Somalia, Syria, and Yemen. See id. at 8978. In Section 5, the President immediately suspended the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program (“USRAP”) for 120 days, imposed a ban of indefinite duration on the entry of refugees from Syria, and limited the entry of refugees to 50,000 in fiscal year 2017. Id. at 8979. EO1 also ordered that changes be made to the refugee screening process “to prioritize refugee claims made by individuals on the basis of religious-based persecution, provided that the religion of the individual is a minority religion in the individual’s country of nationality.” Id. EO1 permitted the Secretaries of State and Homeland Security to make case-by-case exceptions to these restrictions “when in the national interest,” and explained that it would be in the national interest “when the person is a religious minority in his country of nationality facing religious persecution.” Id.

EO1 took immediate effect, causing great uncertainty as to the scope of the order, particularly in its application to lawful permanent residents. Notably, federal officials themselves were unsure as to the scope of EO1, which caused mass confusion at airports and other ports of entry. See Brief of the Foundation of Children of Iran and Iranian Alliance Across Borders as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 77 at 11–12 (describing how an Iranian visa holder was turned away while en route to the United States because of the confusion regarding the contours of EO1’s scope); Brief of Former National Security Officials as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 108 at 25 n.53 & 54 (noting confusion at airports because officials were neither consulted nor informed of EO1 in advance).

Shortly after EO1 issued, the States of Washington and Minnesota filed suit in the Western District of Washington to enjoin EO1. On February 3, 2017, the district court granted a temporary restraining order (“TRO”). Washington v. Trump, No. C17-0141JLR, 2017 WL 462040 (W.D. Wash. Feb. 3, 2017). On February 4, 2017, the Government filed an emergency motion in our court, seeking a stay of the TRO pending appeal.

On February 9, 2017, this court denied the Government’s emergency motion for a stay of the injunction. Washington v. Trump, 847 F.3d 1151 (9th Cir. 2017) (per curiam), reconsideration en banc denied, 853 F.3d 933 (9th Cir. 2017). In so doing, the panel rejected the Government’s arguments that EO1 was wholly unreviewable. See id. at 1161–64. After determining that the states had standing based on the alleged harms to their proprietary interests, id. at 1159–61, this court concluded that the states demonstrated a likelihood of success on their procedural due process claim, at least as to lawful permanent residents and nonimmigrant visa holders, id. at 1164–66. The panel did not review the states’ other claims, including the statutory-based claims. Id. at 1164.

Rather than continue with the litigation, the Government filed an unopposed motion to voluntarily dismiss the underlying appeal after the President signed EO2. On March 8, 2017, this court granted that motion, which substantially ended the story of EO1. The curtain opens next to the present controversy regarding EO2.

B

On March 6, 2017, the President issued EO2, also entitled “Protecting the Nation From Foreign Terrorist Entry Into the United States.” Exec. Order No. 13780, 82 Fed. Reg. 13209 (Mar. 6, 2017). The revised Order was to take effect on March 16, 2017, at which point EO1 would be revoked. Id. at 13218. The Order expressly stated that EO1 “did not provide a basis for discriminating for or against members of any particular religion” and was “not motivated by animus toward any religion.” Id. at 13210.

Section 2—“Temporary Suspension of Entry for Nationals of Countries of Particular Concern During Review Period”—reinstates the 90-day ban on travel for nationals of six of the seven majority-Muslim countries identified in EO1: Iran, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, and Yemen. Id. at 13213. Section 2 also directs the Secretary of Homeland Security, the Secretary of State, and the Director of National Intelligence to “conduct a worldwide review to identify whether, and if so what, additional information will be needed from each foreign country to adjudicate an application by a national of that country for a visa, admission, or other benefit under the INA (adjudications) in order to determine that the individual is not a security or public-safety threat.” Id. at 13212. Section 2(c) states in full:

To temporarily reduce investigative burdens on relevant agencies during the review period described in subsection (a) of this section, to ensure the proper review and maximum utilization of available resources for the screening and vetting of foreign nationals, to ensure that adequate standards are established to prevent infiltration by foreign terrorists, and in light of the national security concerns referenced in section 1 of this order, I hereby proclaim, pursuant to sections 212(f) and 215(a) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. [§§] 1182(f) and 1185(a), that the unrestricted entry into the United States of nationals of Iran, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, and Yemen would be detrimental to the interests of the United States. I therefore direct that the entry into the United States of nationals of those six countries be suspended for 90 days from the effective date of this order, subject to the limitations, waivers, and exceptions set forth in sections 3 and 12 of this order.

Id. at 13213.

Regarding the six identified countries, EO2 explains:

Each of these countries is a state sponsor of terrorism, has been significantly compromised by terrorist organizations, or contains active conflict zones. Any of these circumstances diminishes the foreign government’s willingness or ability to share or validate important information about individuals seeking to travel to the United States. Moreover, the significant presence in each of these countries of terrorist organizations, their members, and others exposed to those organizations increases the chance that conditions will be exploited to enable terrorist operatives or sympathizers to travel to the United States. Finally, once foreign nationals from these countries are admitted to the United States, it is often difficult to remove them, because many of these countries typically delay issuing, or refuse to issue, travel documents.

Id. at 13210. Based on the conditions of these six countries, “the risk of erroneously permitting entry of a national of one of these countries who intends to commit terrorist acts or otherwise harm the national security of the United States is unacceptably high.” Id. at 13211.

The Order states that it no longer includes Iraq on the list of designated countries because of Iraq’s “close cooperative relationship” with the United States and its recent efforts to enhance its travel documentation procedures. Id. at 13212. The Order also states that its scope has been narrowed from EO1 in response to “judicial concerns” about the suspension of entry with respect to certain categories of aliens. Id. EO2 applies only to individuals outside of the United States who do not have a valid visa as of the issuance of EO1 or EO2. EO2, unlike EO1, expressly exempts lawful permanent residents, dual citizens traveling under a passport issued by a country not on the banned list, asylees, and refugees already admitted to the United States. See id. at 13213–14. The Order also provides that consular officers or Customs and Border Protection officials can exercise discretion in authorizing case-by-case waivers to issue visas and grant entry during the suspension period, and offers examples of when waivers “could be appropriate.” See id. at 13214–15.

Section 6—“Realignment of the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program for Fiscal Year 2017”—suspends USRAP for 120 days. Id. at 13215. During this period, the heads of certain executive agencies are directed to review the current USRAP application and adjudication processes, and to determine the additional procedures that “should” be required for individuals seeking admission as refugees. See id. at 13215–16. Invoking 8 U.S.C. § 1182(f), Section 6(b) reduces the number of refugees to be admitted from 110,000 to 50,000 in fiscal year 2017. Id. at 13216. The Order also removes EO1’s preference for refugees facing persecution as a member of a minority religion, and no longer imposes a complete ban on Syrian refugees. Section 6 further provides for discretionary case-by-case waivers. Id.

EO2 supplies additional information relevant to national security concerns. The Order includes excerpts from the State Department’s 2015 Country Reports on Terrorism, that it asserts demonstrate “why . . . nationals [from the designated countries] continue to present heightened risk to the security of the United States.” Id. at 13210; see id. at 13210–11 (providing a brief description of country conditions for each of the designated countries). The Order states that foreign nationals and refugees have committed acts of terrorism:

Recent history shows that some of those who have entered the United States through our immigration system have proved to be threats to our national security. Since 2001, hundreds of persons born abroad have been convicted of terrorism-related crimes in the United States. They have included not just persons who came here legally on visas but also individuals who first entered the country as refugees. For example, in January 2013, two Iraqi nationals admitted to the United States as refugees in 2009 were sentenced to 40 years and to life in prison, respectively, for multiple terrorism-related offenses. And in October 2014, a native of Somalia who had been brought to the United States as a child refugee and later became a naturalized United States citizen was sentenced to 30 years in prison for attempting to use a weapon of mass destruction as part of a plot to detonate a bomb at a crowded Christmas-tree-lighting ceremony in Portland, Oregon. The Attorney General has reported to me that more than 300 persons who entered the United States as refugees are currently the subjects of counterterrorism investigations by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Id. at 13212. EO2 does not discuss any instances of domestic terrorism involving nationals from Iran, Libya, Sudan, Syria, or Yemen.

Two versions of a report from the Department of Homeland Security (“DHS”) surfaced after EO1 issued. First, a draft report from DHS, prepared about one month after EO1 issued and two weeks prior to EO2’s issuance, concluded that citizenship “is unlikely to be a reliable indicator of potential terrorist activity” and that citizens of countries affected by EO1 are “[r]arely [i]mplicated in U.S.-[b]ased [t]errorism.” Specifically, the DHS report determined that since the spring of 2011, at least eighty-two individuals were inspired by a foreign terrorist group to carry out or attempt to carry out an attack in the United States. Slightly more than half were U.S. citizens born in the United States, and the remaining persons were from twenty-six different countries—with the most individuals originating from Pakistan, followed by Somalia, Bangladesh, Cuba, Ethiopia, Iraq, and Uzbekistan.

Id. Of the six countries included in EO2, only Somalia was identified as being among the “top” countries-of-origin for the terrorists analyzed in the report.

During the time period covered in the report, three offenders were from Somalia; one was from Iran, Sudan, and Yemen each; and none was from Syria or Libya.

The final version of the report, issued five days prior to EO2, concluded “that most foreign-born, [U.S.]-based violent extremists likely radicalized several years after their entry to the United States, [thus] limiting the ability of screening and vetting officials to prevent their entry because of national security concerns” (emphasis added).

The same day EO2 issued, Attorney General Jefferson B. Sessions III and Secretary of Homeland Security John F. Kelly submitted a letter to the President recommending that he “direct[] a temporary pause in entry” from countries that are “unable or unwilling to provide the United States with adequate information about their nationals” or are designated as “state sponsors of terrorism.”

D

The State of Hawai‘i (“the State”) filed a motion for a TRO seeking to enjoin EO1, which the District of Hawai‘i did not rule on because of the nationwide TRO entered in the Western District of Washington. After EO2 issued, the State filed an amended complaint challenging EO2 in order “to protect its residents, its employers, its educational institutions, and its sovereignty.” Dr.

Elshikh, the Imam of the Muslim Association of Hawai‘i, joined the State’s challenge because the Order “inflicts a grave injury on Muslims in Hawai‘i, including Dr. Elshikh, his family, and members of his Mosque.” In 2015, Dr. Elshikh’s wife filed an I-130 Petition for Alien Relative on behalf of her mother—Dr. Elshikh’s mother-in-law—a Syrian national living in Syria. Dr. Elshikh fears that his mother-in-law will not be able to enter the United States if EO2 is implemented. Plaintiffs named as Defendants Donald J. Trump, in his official capacity as President of the United States; the U.S. Department of Homeland Security; John F. Kelly, in his official capacity as Secretary of Homeland Security; the U.S. Department of State; Rex W. Tillerson, in his official capacity as Secretary of State; and the United States of America (collectively referred to as “the Government”).

Plaintiffs allege that EO2 suffers similar constitutional and statutory defects as EO1 and claim that the Order violates: the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment; the equal protection guarantees of the Fifth Amendment’s Due Process Clause on the basis of religion and/or national origin, nationality, or alienage; the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment based on substantive due process rights; the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment based on procedural due process rights; the Immigration and Nationality Act; the Religious Freedom Restoration Act; and the Administrative Procedure Act. For their INA claim, Plaintiffs specifically contend that EO2 violates the INA by discriminating on the basis of nationality, ignoring and modifying the statutory criteria for determining terrorism-related inadmissibility, and exceeding the President's delegated authority under the INA.³ Plaintiffs also filed a motion for a TRO along with their amended complaint.

On March 15, 2017, the district court granted the TRO, holding that Plaintiffs had shown a likelihood of success on the merits of their Establishment Clause claim, and entered a nationwide injunction prohibiting enforcement of Sections 2 and 6 of EO2. See Hawai'i v. Trump, No. CV 17-00050 DKW-KSC, 2017 WL 1011673 (D. Haw. Mar. 15, 2017) ("Hawai'i TRO"). On March 29, 2017, the district court granted Plaintiffs' motion to convert the TRO to a preliminary injunction. See Hawai'i v. Trump, No. CV 17-00050 DKW-KSC, 2017 WL 1167383 (D. Haw. Mar. 29, 2017) ("Hawai'i PI"). The district court declined to narrow the scope of the injunction, concluding that the entirety of Sections 2 and 6 of the Order ran afoul of the Establishment Clause and that the Government did not provide a workable framework for narrowing the scope of the enjoined conduct. See id. at *8. The court entered the following injunction:

Defendants and all their respective officers, agents, servants, employees, and attorneys, and persons in active concert or participation with them, are hereby enjoined from enforcing or implementing Sections 2 and 6 of the Executive Order across the Nation. Enforcement of these provisions in all places, including the United States, at all United States borders and ports of entry, and in the issuance of visas is prohibited, pending further orders from this Court.

Id. at *9.

On March 30, 2017, the Government filed a notice of appeal. This court granted the Government's unopposed motion to expedite the case. The Government requests that this court vacate the preliminary injunction, or at least narrow the injunction, and also stay the injunction pending appeal.

II

The district court held that Plaintiffs were entitled to preliminary relief because they had made a strong showing of success on the merits of their Establishment Clause claim. Applying the secular purpose test from Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612–13 (1971), and relying on the historical record that contained “significant and un rebutted evidence of religious animus driving the promulgation of the Executive Order,” the district court concluded that EO2 was issued with an intent to disfavor people of Islamic faith. See Hawai'i TRO, 2017 WL 1011673, at *12–16. In so doing, the district court decided an important and controversial constitutional claim without first expressing its views on Plaintiffs' statutory claims, including their INA-based claim. See id. at *11 n.11.

The INA claim was squarely before the district court and briefed and argued before this court. Mindful of the Supreme Court’s admonition that “courts should be extremely careful not to issue unnecessary constitutional rulings,” “[p]articularly where, as here, a case implicates the fundamental relationship between the Branches,” we think it appropriate to turn first to the INA claim. Am. Foreign Serv. Ass’n v. Garfinkel, 490 U.S. 153, 161 (1989) (per curiam); accord Lying v. Nw. Indian Cemetery Protective Ass’n, 485 U.S. 439, 445 (1988) (“A fundamental and longstanding principle of judicial restraint requires that courts avoid reaching constitutional questions in advance of the necessity of deciding them.”).

After first determining that Plaintiffs have standing to assert their INA-based statutory claim, we conclude that Plaintiffs have shown a likelihood of success on the merits of that claim and that the district court’s preliminary injunction order can be affirmed in large part based on statutory grounds. For reasons further explained below, we need not, and do not, reach the Establishment Clause claim to resolve this appeal. See Ashwander v. Tenn. Valley Auth., 297 U.S. 288, 347 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring) (“[I]f a case can be decided on either of two grounds, one involving a constitutional question, the other a question of statutory construction or general law, the Court will decide only the latter.”).

III

Before turning to our review of Plaintiffs’ statutory claim, we first address the Government's challenge to the preliminary injunction order on justiciability grounds. The Government contends both that Plaintiffs lack standing to pursue this case and that the case is not yet ripe. The Government further contends that the consular nonreviewability doctrine bars this court from reviewing EO2. We address each contention in turn.

A

“Article III of the Constitution limits federal-court jurisdiction to ‘Cases’ and ‘Controversies.’” Massachusetts v. EPA, 549 U.S. 497, 516 (2007). “Standing to sue is a doctrine rooted in the traditional understanding of a case or controversy” and limits who may “maintain a lawsuit in federal court to seek redress for a legal wrong.” Spokeo, Inc. v. Robins, 136 S. Ct. 1540, 1547 (2016). “[T]o satisfy Article III’s standing requirements, a plaintiff must show (1) it has suffered an ‘injury in fact’ that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical; (2) the injury is fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and (3) it is likely, as opposed to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.” Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Laidlaw Env’tl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 180–81 (2000) (citing Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560–61 (1992)). “At this very preliminary stage of the litigation, [Plaintiffs] may rely on the allegations in their [amended complaint] and whatever other evidence they submitted in support of their [preliminary injunction] motion to meet their burden.” Washington, 847 F.3d at 1159; see Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561.

The district court determined that both the State of Hawai‘i and Dr. Elshikh have standing to pursue their Establishment Clause claim. See Hawai‘i TRO, 2017 WL 1011673, at *7–10. The Government argues that Plaintiffs fail to satisfy the requirements of Article III standing to bring their Establishment Clause claim. Plaintiffs must establish standing for each of their claims. DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 U.S. 332, 352 (2006). As we do not reach Plaintiffs’ Establishment Clause claim, we address only whether Plaintiffs have standing to challenge EO2 based on their INA-based statutory claim and conclude that they do.

Dr. Elshikh is an American citizen of Egyptian descent. He alleges that EO2 will prevent his mother-in-law from obtaining a visa to reunite with her family. His mother-in-law is a Syrian national currently living in Syria; she last visited her family in Hawai‘i in 2005 and has not yet met two of her five grandchildren. Dr. Elshikh’s wife filed an I-130 Petition for Alien Relative on behalf of her mother in September 2015, and the petition was approved in February 2016. After EO1 issued, Dr. Elshikh was told that his mother-in-law’s visa application for an immigrant visa had been put on hold. After EO1 was enjoined, he was notified that the application had progressed to the next stage of the process, and that her interview would be scheduled at an embassy overseas. Dr. Elshikh understandably and reasonably fears that EO2 will prevent his mother-in-law from entering the country.⁴ Dr. Elshikh asserts that he has standing based on the barriers EO2 imposes in preventing him from reuniting his mother-in-law with his family.

This court and the Supreme Court have reviewed the merits of cases brought by U.S. residents with a specific interest in the entry of a foreigner. See, e.g., Kerry v. Din, 135 S. Ct. 2128, 2131 (2015) (involving a challenge by a U.S. citizen to the denial of her husband's visa); Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U.S. 753, 756–60 (1972) (addressing a challenge by American professors to the denial of a visa to a journalist they had invited to speak at several academic events); Cardenas v. United States, 826 F.3d 1164, 1167 (9th Cir. 2016) (determining that a U.S. citizen could challenge the denial of her husband's visa). Most similar to this case, in Legal Assistance for Vietnamese Asylum Seekers v. Department of State, Bureau of Consular Affairs, the D.C. Circuit determined that visa sponsors had standing to assert that the State Department's refusal to process visa applications of

Vietnamese citizens living in Hong Kong violated 8 U.S.C. § 1152. 45 F.3d 469, 471–73 (D.C. Cir. 1995), vacated on other grounds, 519 U.S. 1 (1996). The court explained that the State Department’s actions prolonged the separation of immediate family members, which resulted in injury to the sponsors. Id.

Dr. Elshikh seeks to reunite his mother-in-law with his family and similarly experiences prolonged separation from her. By suspending the entry of nationals from the six designated countries, including Syria, EO2 operates to delay or prevent the issuance of visas to nationals from those countries, including Dr. Elshikh’s mother-in-law. Dr. Elshikh has alleged a concrete harm because EO2, specifically the operation of Section 2, is a barrier to reunification with his mother-in-law in light of her stalled visa process. See id. (holding that U.S. resident sponsors had standing to challenge the State Department’s refusal to process visa applications); Int’l Refugee Assistance Project v. Trump, — F.3d —, No. 17-1351, 2017 WL 2273306, at *10 (4th Cir. May 25, 2017) (en banc), as amended (May 31, 2017) (identifying prolonged separation between plaintiff and his wife as a concrete harm). That his mother-in-law’s visa application process was placed on hold when EO1 took effect, but moved forward when EO1 was enjoined, further shows that Dr. Elshikh’s injury is concrete, real, and immediate if EO2 takes effect. Dr. Elshikh has thus alleged a sufficient injury-in-fact. While not challenged by the Government, it is also clear that Dr. Elshikh has established causation and redressability. His injuries are fairly traceable to the Order, satisfying causation, and enjoining EO2 will remove a barrier to reunification and redress that injury, satisfying redressability.

Dr. Elshikh has met the requirements for constitutional standing with respect to the INA-based statutory claim.

The State of Hawai‘i alleges two primary theories of harm in asserting its standing: harm to its proprietary interests and impairment of its sovereign interests.

“[L]ike other associations and private parties, a State is bound to have a variety of proprietary interests. A State may, for example, own land or participate in a business venture.” Alfred L. Snapp & Son, Inc. v. Puerto Rico ex rel. Barez, 458 U.S. 592, 601 (1982). “And like other such proprietors [the State] may at times need to pursue those interests in court.” Id. at 601–02.

The State asserts that it has standing because of the injuries inflicted on its university. The University of Hawai‘i (“the University”), which the State operates, has twenty-three graduate students, at least twenty-nine visiting faculty members, and other permanent faculty members from the six countries designated in EO2. The State asserts that EO2 constrains the University’s ability to recruit and enroll undergraduate and graduate students, and recruit and hire visiting faculty from the affected countries. The State also contends that EO2 threatens the University’s ability to fulfill its educational mission by hampering recruitment of diverse students, preventing scholars from considering employment at the University, dissuading current professors and scholars from continuing their scholarship at the University, hindering the free flow of ideas, and harming its values of inclusiveness and tolerance.

Given the timing of the admissions cycle and this litigation, the State concedes that it is too soon to determine the full impact on recruitment, but asserts that individuals who are not current visa holders or lawful permanent residents would be precluded from considering the University. In its opposition brief, the State gave updated information, explaining that eleven graduate students from the countries affected by the Order have been admitted, and the University was still considering applications from twenty-one other affected applicants. After the case was submitted, Plaintiffs supplemented the record with further updates on the University's admissions cycle.⁵ At least three graduate students, each from one of the six designated countries, have accepted their offers of admission and have committed to attending the University. There are eleven graduate student applicants, each from one of the six designated countries, with pending offers of admission for the 2017–18 school year. University classes begin on August 21,

2017, but at least two of the students who have accepted their offers of admission must be present on campus by August 1, 2017 and August 10, 2017, respectively, for their graduate programs. The State further explains that if EO2 takes effect now, these students' ability to obtain visas will be impeded.

Before Plaintiffs supplemented the record, the Government argued that the State had not identified any prospective student or faculty member who wished to enter the country during Section 2(c)'s 90-day period. However, the State's alleged harm is that EO2 presently constrains their recruitment efforts for students and faculty, and that EO2 deters prospective students and faculty members. Given the short admissions cycle—from when the University offers admissions to when international students must decide whether to attend—and the uncertainty of whether EO2 will inhibit their ability to secure a visa before the fall semester begins, EO2's deterrent effect is an injury that is “concrete” and “imminent,” as opposed to merely “speculative.” See Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560–61 (internal quotation marks omitted). Of course, a student who is not permitted to obtain a visa and enter our country would not accept an offer of admission.

The Government next contends that Plaintiffs cannot rely on events that unfolded after the filing of the complaint to establish standing. This argument is not persuasive. The State had previously contended that its recruitment was constrained by EO2 and its supplemental declaration merely provides greater detail regarding the students who may be unable to join the academic community this fall if EO2 takes effect. We consider the supplemental information as further evidence that EO2 will harm the State because students affected by Section 2(c) may not attend the University, and the University will lose tuition and educational benefits.

The State's standing can thus be grounded in its proprietary interests as an operator of the University. EO2 harms the State's interests because (1) students and faculty suspended from entry are deterred from studying or teaching at the University; and (2) students who are unable to attend the University will not pay tuition or contribute to a diverse student body. See Washington, 847 F.3d at 1161 (holding that states, as operators of universities, had Article III standing to challenge EO1 based on harms to their proprietary interests); Texas v. United States, 809 F.3d 134, 155–63 (5th Cir. 2015), as revised (Nov. 25, 2015), aff'd by an equally divided Court, 136 S. Ct. 2271 (2016) (holding that the state of Texas had standing to challenge the Deferred Action for Parents of Americans and Lawful Permanent Residents (“DAPA”) program based on its alleged injury of subsidizing driver's licenses to DAPA beneficiaries). We further conclude that the State has shown that its injury is fairly traceable to EO2 and that enjoining EO2 would redress its harm.

The State also presents an alternative standing theory: that the Order impairs its sovereign interests in carrying out its refugee policies, among other things. A state has an interest in its “exercise of sovereign power over individuals and entities within the relevant jurisdiction,” which “involves the power to create and enforce a legal code.” Alfred L. Snapp & Son, 458 U.S. at 601. The State contends that EO2 hinders the exercise of its sovereign power to enforce its laws and policies and this inflicts an injury sufficient to provide the State standing to challenge the Order. The State has laws protecting equal rights, barring discrimination, and fostering diversity. See, e.g., Haw. Const. art. 1, §§ 2, 5; Haw. Rev. Stat. §§ 489-3, 515-3. Specific to refugees, the State created the Office of Community Services (“OCS”), which is directed to “[a]ssist and coordinate the efforts of all public and private agencies providing services which affect the disadvantaged, refugees, and immigrants.” Haw. Rev. Stat. § 371K-4. OCS operates multiple programs for refugees.

The State has resettled three refugees this fiscal year, and at least twenty since 2010. EO2 would prevent the State from assisting with refugee resettlement and thus prevent it from effectuating its policies aimed at assisting refugee and immigrant populations. See id. The State’s requested injunctive relief would permit it to assist in the resettlement of refugees, at least through fiscal year 2017. As the State exercises “sovereign power over individuals and entities within the relevant jurisdiction” in administering OCS, we conclude, at this preliminary stage, that the State has made sufficient allegations to support standing to challenge the refugee-related provisions of EO2. See Alfred L. Snapp & Son, 458 U.S. at 601; see also Virginia ex rel. Cuccinelli v. Sebelius, 656 F.3d 253, 269 (4th Cir. 2011) (collecting cases where state was found to possess sovereign standing based on state statutes that regulated behavior or provided for the administration of a state program).

Concluding that Dr. Elshikh and the State have satisfied Article III's standing requirements,⁶ we turn to whether Plaintiffs are within the "zone of interests" protected by the INA.

Because Plaintiffs allege a statutory claim, we must determine whether they meet the requirement of having interests that "fall within the zone of interests protected by the law invoked." Lexmark Int'l, Inc. v. Static Control Components, Inc., 134 S. Ct. 1377, 1388 (2014) (internal quotation marks omitted).

We have little trouble determining that Dr. Elshikh is within the zone of interests of the INA to challenge EO2 based on this statutory claim. He asserts that the travel ban prevents his mother-in-law from reuniting with his family. See

⁶ The State has asserted other proprietary interests, including the loss of tourism revenue. The State also appears to present a standing theory based on its quasi-sovereign interests, as parens patriae, to secure its residents from the harmful effects of discrimination. We do not reach these arguments because we conclude that the State's proprietary interests, as an operator of the University of Hawai'i, and its sovereign interests, in carrying out its refugee programs and policies, are sufficient to confer standing. See Washington, 847 F.3d at 1161 n.5.

Legal Assistance for Vietnamese Asylum Seekers, 45 F.3d at 471–72 (“The INA authorizes the immigration of family members of United States citizens and permanent resident aliens. In originally enacting the INA, Congress implemented the underlying intention of our immigration laws regarding the preservation of the family unit. Given the nature and purpose of the statute, the resident appellants fall well within the zone of interest Congress intended to protect.” (internal quotation marks, citations, and alterations omitted)).

Likewise, the State’s efforts to enroll students and hire faculty members who are nationals from the six designated countries fall within the zone of interests of the INA. The INA makes clear that a nonimmigrant student may be admitted into the United States. See 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(F) (identifying students qualified to pursue a full course of study); 8 C.F.R. § 214.2(f) (providing the requirements for nonimmigrant students, including those in colleges and universities). The INA also provides that nonimmigrant scholars and teachers may be admitted into the United States. See, e.g., 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(J) (identifying students, scholars, trainees, teachers, professors, research assistants, specialists, or leaders in fields of specialized knowledge or skill); id. § 1101(a)(15)(H) (identifying aliens coming to perform services in a specialty occupation); id. § 1101(a)(15)(O) (identifying aliens with extraordinary abilities in the sciences, arts, education, business, or athletics). International students and visiting faculty may qualify for F-1 visas, J-1 visas, H-1B visas, or O-1 visas. See Directory of Visa Categories, U.S. Dep’t of State, <https://travel.state.gov/content/visas/en/general/all-visa-categories.html> (last visited June 6, 2017). The INA leaves no doubt that the State’s interests in student- and employment-based visa petitions for its students and faculty are related to the basic purposes of the INA.

The State’s interest in effectuating its refugee resettlement policies and programs also falls within the zone of interests protected by the INA. See 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(42) (defining “refugees”); id. § 1157 (providing the procedure for determining the number of refugee admissions). These provisions of the INA were amended to provide a “systematic procedure” for the admission of refugees into the United States, as well as “uniform provisions for the effective resettlement and absorption of those refugees who are admitted.” Refugee Act of 1980, Pub. L. No. 96-212, § 101, 94 Stat. 102 (1980). The State argues that EO2 upsets this finely-tuned system devised by Congress.

We conclude that Plaintiffs’ claims of injury as a result of the alleged statutory violations are, at the least, “arguably within the zone of interests” that the INA protects.⁷ Bank of Am. Corp. v. City of Miami, Fla., 137 S. Ct. 1296, 1303

(2017) (quoting Ass'n of Data Processing Serv. Orgs., Inc. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 153 (1970)).

Plaintiffs have standing to assert their INA-based statutory claim that EO2 exceeds the scope of the President's authority under the INA and conflicts with various INA provisions.

The Government next argues that Plaintiffs' claims are speculative and not ripe. "Ripeness is peculiarly a question of timing, designed to prevent the courts, through avoidance of premature adjudication, from entangling themselves in abstract disagreements." Stormans, Inc. v. Selecky, 586 F.3d 1109, 1122 (9th Cir. 2009) (internal quotations marks and alteration omitted). "Our role is neither to issue advisory opinions nor to declare rights in hypothetical cases, but to adjudicate live cases or controversies consistent with the powers granted the judiciary in Article III of the Constitution." Thomas v. Anchorage Equal Rights Comm'n, 220 F.3d 1134, 1138 (9th Cir. 2000).

We are unpersuaded by the Government's arguments that until a student or faculty member requests a waiver and it is denied, or until Dr. Elshikh's mother-in-law requests a waiver and she is denied,⁸ Plaintiffs injuries are not ripe because they assume “contingent future events that may not occur.” Texas v. United States, 523 U.S. 296, 300 (1998) (internal quotation marks omitted)).

Although the waiver may, in theory, provide students, visiting faculty members, or Dr. Elshikh’s mother-in-law an opportunity to obtain visas, the waiver is discretionary. Indeed, no one can count on it. The Order poses hardships to nationals from the six designated countries by barring throughout the suspension period their ability to obtain visas. The waiver provision neither guarantees that waivers will be granted nor provides a process for applying for a waiver; moreover, the ultimate decision is clearly committed to a consular officer’s discretion. See 82 Fed. Reg. at 13214 (“Case-by-case waivers could be appropriate in circumstances such as the following . . .”) (emphasis added); id. at 13219 (stating that nothing in the Order provides any “enforceable” rights). The discretionary waiver is not “a sufficient safety valve,” Washington, 847 F.3d at 1169, and is a far cry from the “contingent future” argued by the Government. Here, nationals from the six designated countries, including Dr. Elshikh’s mother-in-law and students who have accepted, or been offered, admission to the University of Hawai‘i, are burdened by EO2 because they are not permitted entry, interview scheduled for May 24, 2017. This argument does not diminish Dr. Elshikh’s argument that the Order’s suspension of entry of nationals from the six designated countries creates a significant obstacle to reuniting his mother-in-law with him and his family.

and whether they might obtain a waiver is speculative and at the discretion of a consular officer or a Customs and Border Protection official. See 82 Fed. Reg. at 13214.

We decline the Government's invitation to wait until Plaintiffs identify a visa applicant who was denied a discretionary waiver to assess whether Plaintiffs have shown a likelihood of success on the merits of their claims. Regardless of whether Dr. Elshikh's mother-in-law or the University's prospective students and faculty members might conceivably obtain such a waiver, they will face substantial hardship if we were to first require that they try to obtain a waiver before we will consider their case. Cf. Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 149 (1967). We conclude that the claim is ripe for review.

Finally, the Government renews the argument it made before this court in Washington v. Trump that we may not review EO2 because the consular nonreviewability doctrine counsels that the decision to issue or withhold a visa is not subject to judicial review. See Li Hing of Hong Kong, Inc. v. Levin, 800 F.2d 970, 971 (9th Cir. 1986) (“[I]t has been consistently held that the consular official's decision to issue or withhold a visa is not subject either to administrative or judicial review.”). We reject this argument.

Plaintiffs do not seek review of an individual consular officer's decision to grant or to deny a visa pursuant to valid regulations, which could implicate the consular nonreviewability doctrine. Plaintiffs instead challenge “the President’s promulgation of sweeping immigration policy.” Washington, 847 F.3d at 1162. Courts can and do review both constitutional and statutory “challenges to the substance and implementation of immigration policy.” Id. at 1163; see, e.g., Sale v. Haitian Ctrs. Council, Inc., 509 U.S. 155, 187–88 (1993) (addressing the merits of a challenge that an executive order violated the INA and the United Nations Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees); INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 940–41 (1983) (addressing whether a section of the INA that authorized one House of Congress to invalidate a decision of the Executive to allow a deportable alien to remain in the United States was unconstitutional).

This case is justiciable because Plaintiffs seek judicial review of EO2, contending that EO2 exceeds the statutory authority delegated by Congress and constitutional boundaries. “This is a familiar judicial exercise.” Zivotofsky ex rel. Zivotofsky v. Clinton, 566 U.S. 189, 196 (2012). We reject the Government’s argument that the Order is not subject to judicial review. Although “[t]he Executive has broad discretion over the admission and exclusion of aliens, [] that discretion is not boundless. It extends only as far as the statutory authority conferred by Congress and may not transgress constitutional limitations. It is the duty of the courts, in cases properly before them, to say where those statutory and constitutional boundaries lie.” Abourezk v. Reagan, 785 F.2d 1043, 1061 (D.C. Cir. 1986), aff’d, 484 U.S. 1 (1987).

Whatever deference we accord to the President’s immigration and national security policy judgments does not preclude us from reviewing the policy at all. See Rostker v. Goldberg, 453 U.S. 57, 70 (1981) (“[D]eference does not mean abdication.”); Holder v. Humanitarian Law Project, 561 U.S. 1, 34 (2010) (“Our precedents, old and new, make clear that concerns of national security and foreign relations do not warrant abdication of the judicial role.”).

We do not abdicate the judicial role, and we affirm our obligation “to say what the law is” in this case. Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 177 (1803). We turn to the merits of the appeal of the preliminary injunction order.

IV

A preliminary injunction is “an extraordinary remedy that may only be awarded upon a clear showing that the plaintiff is entitled to such relief.” Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 22 (2008). “A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish [1] that he is likely to succeed on the merits, [2] that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, [3] that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and [4] that an injunction is in the public interest.” Id. at 20. We may affirm the district court’s entry of the preliminary injunction “on any ground supported by the record.” Enyart v. Nat’l Conference of Bar Exam’rs, Inc., 630 F.3d 1153, 1159 (9th Cir. 2011).

We consider whether Plaintiffs are entitled to preliminary relief based on the likelihood that EO2 violates the INA.⁹ First, we address whether the President complied with the conditions set forth in § 1182(f), which are necessary for invoking his authority. We next address the conflicts between EO2 and other provisions of the INA.

Under Article I of the Constitution, the power to make immigration laws “is entrusted exclusively to Congress.” Galvan v. Press, 347 U.S. 522, 531 (1954); see U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4 (“The Congress shall have Power . . . [t]o establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization”); Fiallo v. Bell, 430 U.S. 787, 792 (1977) (“[O]ver no conceivable subject is the legislative power of Congress more complete than it is over the admission of aliens.” (internal quotation marks omitted)); id. at 796 (“The conditions of entry for every alien, the particular classes of aliens that shall be denied entry altogether, the basis for determining such classification . . . have been recognized as matters solely for the responsibility of the Congress” (internal quotation marks omitted)).

In the INA of 1952, Congress delegated some of its power to the President through Section 212(f), which provides:

Whenever the President finds that the entry of any aliens or of any class of aliens into the United States would be detrimental to the interests of the United States, he may by proclamation, and for such period as he shall deem necessary, suspend the entry of all aliens or any class of aliens as immigrants or nonimmigrants, or impose on the entry of aliens any restrictions he may deem to be appropriate.

8 U.S.C. § 1182(f).

In Section 2(c) of the Order, the President invokes this power along with § 1185(a)¹⁰ to suspend for 90 days the entry of nationals from the six designated

¹⁰ Section 1185(a)(1) states:

Unless otherwise ordered by the President, it shall be unlawful—
(1) for any alien to depart from or enter or attempt to depart from or enter the United States except under such reasonable rules, regulations, and orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe[.]

8 U.S.C. § 1185(a)(1). The Government does not argue that § 1185(a)(1) provides an independent basis for the suspension of entry. Because, here, this section does not grant the President a meaningfully different authority than § 1182(f), and countries. See 82 Fed. Reg. at 13213. In Section 6(a) of the Order, the President invokes neither section to suspend travel of refugees and to suspend decisions on applications for refugee status for 120 days, but, in Section 6(b), the President invokes § 1182(f) to cap refugee admissions at 50,000 for the 2017 fiscal year. Id. at 13215–16.

The parties dispute whether EO2 falls clearly within the President’s congressionally delegated authority. To be sure, § 1182(f) gives the President broad authority to suspend the entry of aliens or classes of aliens. However, this authority is not unlimited. Cf. Kent v. Dulles, 357 U.S. 116, 129 (1958) (“[I]f that power is delegated, the standards must be adequate to pass scrutiny by the accepted tests.”); J.W. Hampton, Jr., & Co. v. United States, 276 U.S. 394, 409 (1928) (“[L]egislative action is not a forbidden delegation of legislative power” if Congress provides an “intelligible principle to which the person or body authorized . . . is directed to conform.”). Section 1182(f) requires that the President find that the entry of a class of aliens into the United States would be detrimental to the interests of the United States.¹¹ This section requires that the because § 1182(f) specifically provides for the President’s authority to suspend entry, our analysis proceeds under § 1182(f), understanding that the “reasonable rules, regulations, and orders” the President prescribes would need to, at a minimum, align with the President’s authority under § 1182(f).

President's findings support the conclusion that entry of all nationals from the six designated countries, all refugees, and refugees in excess of 50,000 would be harmful to the national interest. There is no sufficient finding in EO2 that the entry of the excluded classes would be detrimental to the interests of the United States.

Section 2(c) declares that “the unrestricted entry into the United States of nationals of Iran, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, and Yemen would be detrimental to the interests of the United States” and directs that the entry of nationals from those designated countries be barred for 90 days. 82 Fed. Reg. at 13213. The provision bans more than 180 million people from entry based on their national origin, including nationals who may have never been physically present in those countries. See Brief of Former National Security Officials as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 108 at 17. Section 2(c) states:

[1] To temporarily reduce investigative burdens on relevant agencies during the review period [of the United States' vetting procedures], [2] to ensure the proper review and maximum utilization of available resources for the screening and vetting of foreign nationals, [3] to ensure that adequate standards are established to prevent infiltration by foreign terrorists, and [4] in light of the national security concerns referenced in section 1 of this order, I hereby proclaim, pursuant to sections 212(f) and 215(a) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. [§§] 1182(f) and 1185(a), that the unrestricted entry into the United States of nationals hurtful.” Detrimental, Oxford English Dictionary, <http://www.oed.com/view/Entry/51332?redirectedFrom=detrimental#eid>. Throughout the opinion, in addition to the term “detrimental,” we also use its synonyms “harmful” and “injurious.”

of Iran, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, and Yemen would be detrimental to the interests of the United States. I therefore direct that the entry into the United States of nationals of those six countries be suspended.

82 Fed. Reg. at 13213. The Government explains that the Order’s objective “is to address the risk that potential terrorists might exploit possible weaknesses in the Nation’s screening and vetting procedures while the review of those procedures is underway.”

We reject the first three reasons provided in Section 2(c) because they relate to preservation of government resources to review existing procedures and ensure adequate vetting procedures. There is no finding that present vetting standards are inadequate, and no finding that absent the improved vetting procedures there likely will be harm to our national interests. These identified reasons do not support the conclusion that the entry of nationals from the six designated countries would be harmful to our national interests.

We turn to the fourth reason—national security concerns—and examine whether it confers a legally sufficient basis for the President’s conclusion that the nationality-based entry restriction is warranted. Section 1(d) of the Order explains that nationals from Iran, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, and Yemen warrant additional scrutiny because:

Each of these countries is a state sponsor of terrorism, has been significantly compromised by terrorist organizations, or contains active conflict zones. Any of these circumstances diminishes the foreign government’s willingness or ability to share or validate important information about individuals seeking to travel to the United States. Moreover, the significant presence in each of these countries of terrorist organizations, their members, and others exposed to those organizations increases the chance that conditions will be exploited to enable terrorist operatives or sympathizers to travel to the United States. Finally, once foreign nationals from these countries are admitted to the United States, it is often difficult to remove them, because many of these countries typically delay issuing, or refuse to issue, travel documents.

Id. at 13210 (emphasis added).

Because of these country conditions, the Order concludes that “the risk of erroneously permitting entry of a national of one of these countries who intends to commit terrorist acts or otherwise harm the national security of the United States is unacceptably high.” Id. at 13211. The Order further indicates that “hundreds of persons born abroad have been convicted of terrorism-related crimes in the United States[,]” but does not identify the number of nationals from the six designated countries who have been so convicted.¹² See id. at 13212.

The Order makes no finding that nationality alone renders entry of this broad class of individuals a heightened security risk to the United States. See Int’l

¹² Amicus Cato Institute explains that over the past decade and a half, only twenty-six nationals from the six designated countries have been convicted for any kind of terrorism offense, and that only four nationals from the six designated countries have been convicted of attempting or plotting a terrorist attack in the United States in that time frame. Brief of the Cato Institute as Amicus Curiae, Dkt. No. 170 at 11–12. Since the September 11, 2001 attacks, twelve people have succeeded in carrying out fatal domestic terrorist attacks—none committed by nationals from the six designated countries in EO2. See Brief of Foundation of Children of Iran and Iranian Alliance Across Borders as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 77 at 23.

Refugee Assistance Project, 2017 WL 2273306, at *31 (Keenan, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment) (“[T]he Second Executive Order does not state that any nationals of the six identified countries, by virtue of their nationality, intend to commit terrorist acts in the United States or otherwise pose a detriment to the interests of the United States.”).

The Order does not tie these nationals in any way to terrorist organizations within the six designated countries. It does not identify these nationals as contributors to active conflict or as those responsible for insecure country conditions. It does not provide any link between an individual’s nationality and their propensity to commit terrorism or their inherent dangerousness.¹³ In short,

¹³ Former Presidents have invoked § 1182(f) under non-exigent circumstances to address compromised security conditions abroad but have tied exclusions to the culpable conduct of barred aliens, such as aliens who contributed to a country’s situation in a specified way or were members of particular narrowly defined and/or dangerous groups. See Kate M. Manuel, Executive Authority to Exclude Aliens: In Brief 6–10, Congressional Research Service (2017) (listing categories of aliens excluded under 8 U.S.C. § 1182(f)); see also 9 Foreign Affairs Manual § 302.14-3(B)(1)(b) (2016), <https://fam.state.gov/FAM/09FAM/09FAM030214.html> (stating that executive orders issued under § 1182(f) have typically applied to “individuals”; have sometimes been “based on affiliation”; and otherwise have suspended entry “based on objectionable conduct”); Brief of Former Federal Immigration and Homeland Security Officials as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 176 at 18–19 (“None of the Executive actions cited elsewhere by the Government, nor any others known to amici, invoked § 1182(f) to suspend entry from one or more countries based on the assumption that nationals from those countries were inherently dangerous.” (footnotes omitted)). President Obama’s Executive Order 13726, for example, suspended the entry into the United States of persons who

the Order does not provide a rationale explaining why permitting entry of nationals from the six designated countries under current protocols would be detrimental to the interests of the United States.¹⁴ were responsible or complicit in particular actions or policies that threaten the stability of Libya. See 81 Fed. Reg. 23559 (Apr. 19, 2016).

In two instances, former Presidents have distinguished classes of aliens on the basis of nationality. But these distinctions were made not because of a particular concern that entry of the individuals themselves would be detrimental, but rather, as retaliatory diplomatic measures responsive to government conduct directed at the United States. For example, President Carter's proclamation barring the future entry of Iranians occurred during the exigent circumstance of the Iranian hostage crisis. This was one of many sanctions imposed to increase political pressure on the Iranian government to ensure the safe return of American hostages. See Exec. Order 12172, 44 Fed. Reg. 67947 (Nov. 26, 1979), amended by Exec. Order 12206, 45 Fed. Reg. 24101 (Apr. 7, 1980); President Jimmy Carter, Sanctions Against Iran Remarks Announcing U.S. Actions, The American Presidency Project (Apr. 7, 1980), <http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=33233%20>. President Reagan's suspension of entry of certain Cuban nationals as immigrants came as a response to the Cuban government's own suspension of "all types of procedures regarding the execution" of an immigration agreement between the United States and Cuba, which had "disrupt[ed] normal migration procedures between the two countries." See Proclamation No. 5517, 51 Fed. Reg. 30470 (Aug. 22, 1986).

The Order's discussion of country conditions fails to bridge the gap. Indeed, its use of nationality as the sole basis for suspending entry means that nationals without significant ties to the six designated countries, such as those who left as children or those whose nationality is based on parentage alone, should be suspended from entry. Yet, nationals of other countries who do have meaningful ties to the six designated countries—and may be contributing to the very country conditions discussed—fall outside the scope of Section 2(c). Consequently, EO2's focus on nationality “could have the paradoxical effect of barring entry by a Syrian national who has lived in Switzerland for decades, but not a Swiss national who has immigrated to Syria during its civil war.” Hawai'i TRO, 2017 WL 1011673, at *15 (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted); see also Brief of the Cato Institute as Amicus Curiae, Dkt. No. 170 at 14–15 (providing statistics on nationals of the designated countries living in other countries as migrants, refugees, or asylum seekers and explaining that Syrian and Iranian nationals do not gain nationality by virtue of their place of birth).

Although the Order explains that country conditions in the six designated countries lessen their governments' ability to share information about nationals seeking to travel to our country, the Order specifically avoids making any finding that the current screening processes are inadequate. As the law stands, a visa applicant bears the burden of showing that the applicant is eligible to receive a visa or other document for entry and is not inadmissible. See 8 U.S.C. § 1361. The Government already can exclude individuals who do not meet that burden. See id. The Order offers no further reason explaining how this individualized adjudication process is flawed such that permitting entry of an entire class of nationals is injurious to the interests of the United States.

Finally, the Order relies on 8 U.S.C. § 1187(a)(12) to explain why the six countries have been designated. 82 Fed. Reg. at 13210. In § 1187(a)(12), Congress prevented use of the Visa Waiver Program by dual nationals of, or those who have visited in the last six years, (1) Iraq and Syria, (2) any country designated by the Secretary of State as a state sponsor of terrorism, and (3) any other country designated as a country of concern by the Secretary of Homeland Security, in consultation with the Secretary of State and the Director of National Intelligence. Rather than setting an outright ban on entry of nationals from these countries, Congress restricted access to the tourist Visa Waiver Program and instead required that persons who are nationals of or have recently traveled to these countries enter the United States with a visa. This provision reflects Congress's considered view on similar security concerns that the Order seeks to address. See Chadha, 462 U.S. at 951, 959 (explaining that our founders "consciously" chose to place the legislative process in the hands of a “deliberate and deliberative” body). The Order identifies no new information to justify Section 2(c)’s blanket ban as contrasted with § 1187(a)(12)’s restriction from the Visa Waiver Program. Moreover, relying on § 1187(a)(12) alone, which requires that aliens from these countries undergo vetting through visa procedures, does not explain why their entry would be detrimental to the interests of the United States. To the contrary, it effectively negates the Order’s statement of detriment—that the “unrestricted entry into the United States of nationals [of the six designated countries] would be detrimental to the interests of the United States.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 13213 (emphasis added). Section 1187(a)(12) dictates that the entry of individuals covered by the Order is never “unrestricted.”

In conclusion, the Order does not offer a sufficient justification to suspend the entry of more than 180 million people on the basis of nationality. National security is not a “talismanic incantation” that, once invoked, can support any and all exercise of executive power under § 1182(f). United States v. Robel, 389 U.S. 258, 263–64 (1967); see also Korematsu v. United States, 323 U.S. 214, 235 (1944) (Murphy, J., dissenting) (“[T]he exclusion order necessarily must rely for its reasonableness upon the assumption that all persons of Japanese ancestry may have a dangerous tendency to commit sabotage and espionage and to aid our Japanese enemy in other ways. It is difficult to believe that reason, logic or experience could be marshalled in support of such an assumption.”). Section 1182(f) requires that the President exercise his authority only after meeting the precondition of finding that entry of an alien or class of aliens would be detrimental to the interests of the United States. Here, the President has not done so.

Section 6(a) suspends travel of refugees into the United States under USRAP and suspends decisions on applications for refugee status for 120 days but does not specifically announce that the entry of refugees would be detrimental to the interests of the United States. 82 Fed. Reg. at 13215.

Assuming the President also relied on § 1182(f) to suspend USRAP for 120 days, EO2 provides the following information to possibly support the conclusion that refugee admissions would injure the national interest. First, EO2 explains that the screening and vetting procedures associated with USRAP “play a crucial role in detecting foreign nationals who may commit, aid, or support acts of terrorism and in preventing those individuals from entering the United States,” and that it is the policy of the United States to improve screening and vetting procedures associated with USRAP. Id. at 13209. Section 1(h) cites two examples of refugees who have been convicted of terrorism-related crimes in the United States:

[1] [I]n January 2013, two Iraqi nationals admitted to the United States as refugees in 2009 were sentenced to 40 years and to life in prison, respectively, for multiple terrorism-related offenses.^[15]

[2] [I]n October 2014, a native of Somalia who had been brought to the United States as a child refugee and later became a naturalized United States citizen was sentenced to 30 years in prison for attempting to use a weapon of mass destruction^[16]

82 Fed. Reg. at 13212. Section 1(h) also explains that there are “more than 300 persons who entered the United States as refugees [who] are currently the subjects of counterterrorism investigations by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.” Id.

EO2 does not reveal any threat or harm to warrant suspension of USRAP for 120 days and does not support the conclusion that the entry of refugees in the interim time period would be harmful. Nor does it provide any indication that present vetting and screening procedures are inadequate.¹⁷ Instead, EO2 justifies

¹⁷ Refugees receive the most thorough vetting of all travelers to the United States in a process that takes eighteen to twenty-four months. By the time refugees are approved for resettlement in the United States, they have been reviewed by the the 120-day suspension as a review period of USRAP application and adjudication processes. 82 Fed. Reg. at 13215. The Government reiterates that the President directed the suspension “in order to allow the Secretary of State to review application and adjudication processes.” These explanations do not support a finding that the travel and admission of refugees would be detrimental to the interests of the United States.

iii

Section 6(b) of EO2 restricts entry of refugees to no more than 50,000 in the 2017 fiscal year because entry in excess of 50,000 “would be detrimental to the interests of the United States.” 82 Fed. Reg. at 13216. But in accordance with 8 U.S.C. § 1157, President Obama previously determined that the admission of 110,000 refugees to the United States during fiscal year 2017 was justified by humanitarian concerns or otherwise in the national interest. See Presidential Determination on Refugee Admissions for Fiscal Year 2017, Presidential Determination No. 2016-13, 81 Fed. Reg. 70315 (Sept. 28, 2016); see also Proposed Refugee Admissions for Fiscal Year 2017: Report to the Congress,

No. 108 at 14–16.

<https://www.state.gov/documents/organization/262168.pdf>.¹⁸

To the extent that 60,000 additional refugees can be considered a class of aliens, EO2 makes no findings to justify barring entry in excess of 50,000 as detrimental to the interests of the United States. EO2 gives no explanation for why the 50,001st to the 110,000th refugee would be harmful to the national interest, nor does it specify any further threat to national security. And there is not any rationale explaining why the previous target admission of 110,000 refugees this fiscal year was justified by humanitarian concerns or otherwise in the national interest, see 8 U.S.C. § 1157(a)(2), but that the entry of more than 50,000 refugees this same fiscal year would be detrimental to the national interest. Here too, the President did not meet the statutory precondition of exercising his authority under § 1182(f) to cap refugee admissions.

The actions taken in Sections 2 and 6 require the President first to make sufficient findings that the entry of nationals from the six designated countries and the entry of all refugees would be detrimental to the interests of the United States. We conclude that the President did not satisfy this precondition before exercising his delegated authority. Plaintiffs have shown a likelihood of success on the merits of their claim that the President exceeded his authority under §§ 1182(f) and 1185(a).

Plaintiffs contend that Section 2(c) of the Order violates the INA because it discriminates on the basis of nationality, thus violating the non-discrimination mandate of § 1152(a)(1)(A) of the INA. They argue that although the President is given broad authority under § 1182(f), this authority is restrained by § 1152(a)(1)(A).

Contemporaneous to enacting the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965, Congress passed the INA of 1965 to eliminate the “national origins system as the basis for the selection of immigrants to the United States.” H.R. Rep. No. 89-745, at 8 (1965). Section 1152(a)(1)(A) was enacted as part of that act, and provides:

[N]o person shall receive any preference or priority or be discriminated against in the issuance of an immigrant visa because of the person’s race, sex, nationality, place of birth, or place of residence.

8 U.S.C. § 1152(a)(1)(A) (emphasis added). Section 1152(a)(1)(A) contains specific exemptions, and § 1182(f) is not among them.

The Government tries to reconcile the Order’s Section 2(c) with § 1152(a)(1)(A) by arguing that Section 2(c) bars entry of nationals from the six designated countries but does not deny the issuance of immigrant visas based on nationality. EO2's suspension of entry on the basis of nationality, however, in substance operates as a ban on visa issuance on the basis of nationality. The Order's text confirms as much. Its primary purpose is to evaluate screening and vetting procedures associated with the visa issuance process. 82 Fed. Reg. at 13209. EO2 affects nationals of the six designated countries who were outside of the United States on the effective date of the Order but did not have a valid visa at specific times, such as the effective date of EO1. 82 Fed. Reg. at 13213. Further, it provides for a waiver so consular officers or Customs and Border Protection officials may authorize the issuance of visas during the suspension period. Id. at 13214. The Government also stresses that it should not be required to issue visas for aliens who are validly barred from entry, explaining that "[r]equiring that such aliens be issued visas permitting them to travel to this country, only to be denied entry upon arrival, would create needless difficulties and confusion." Indeed, the Government clarified at oral argument that as a practical matter, the entry ban would be implemented through visa denials. Moreover, the statute makes clear that aliens deemed inadmissible under § 1182, including under § 1182(f) "are ineligible to receive visas," thus confirming the substantial overlap between a denial of entry under § 1182(f) and a visa denial. See 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a); see also Int'l Refugee Assistance Project, 2017 WL 2273306, at *52 (Thacker, J., concurring) (explaining that the Government's "own arguments and the text and operation of [EO2] belie [the] notion” that the visa issuance process is a different activity than suspension of entry).

We cannot blind ourselves to the fact that, for nationals of the six designated countries, EO2 is effectively a ban on the issuance of immigrant visas. If allowed to stand, EO2 would bar issuance of visas based on nationality in violation of § 1152(a)(1)(A). The Government did not dispute this point at oral argument, and it stands to reason that the whole system of the visa issuance would grind to a halt for nationals of the six designated countries whose entry is barred from the United States. Issuance of visas will automatically stop for those who are banned based on nationality. Yet Congress could not have used “more explicit language” in “unambiguously direct[ing] that no nationality-based discrimination shall occur.” Legal Assistance for Vietnamese Asylum Seekers, 45 F.3d at 473.

The Government additionally argues that § 1152(a)(1)(A) does not displace the President’s preexisting authority under § 1182(f), because the President may validly bar entry and the non-discrimination mandate applies strictly to the issuance of visas. Based on the plain statutory text, the Government contends that the non-discrimination mandate of § 1152(a)(1)(A) does not reach the President’s suspension of entry under § 1182(f).

This argument, however, presents a clear conflict between § 1152(a)(1)(A) and § 1182, because it would enable the President to restore discrimination on the basis of nationality that Congress sought to eliminate. It is our duty, if possible, to reconcile the President's statutory authority under § 1182(f) with the non-discrimination mandate of § 1152(a)(1)(A). We begin with the instruction that "all parts of a statute, if at all possible, are to be given effect." Weinberger v. Hyson, Westcott & Dunning, Inc., 412 U.S. 609, 633 (1973); accord Food & Drug Admin. v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. 120, 133 (2000) ("A court must . . . fit, if possible, all parts into an harmonious whole." (internal citation and quotation marks omitted)). We also look "to the design of the statute as a whole and to its object and policy." Gozlon-Peretz v. United States, 498 U.S. 395, 407 (1991) (quoting Crandon v. United States, 494 U.S. 152, 158 (1990)).

Under the Government's argument, the President could circumvent the limitations set by § 1152(a)(1)(A) by permitting the issuance of visas to nationals of the six designated countries, but then deny them entry. Congress could not have intended to permit the President to flout § 1152(a) so easily. See Dada v. Mukasey, 554 U.S. 1, 16 (2008) (courts should not read statutes in such a way that renders them a "nullity" or is "unsustainable").

To avoid this result, and to give effect to § 1152(a)(1)(A), the section "is best read to prohibit discrimination throughout the visa process, which must include the decision whether to admit a visa holder upon presenting the visa."

Brief of Former Immigration and Homeland Security Officials as Amici Curiae,

Dkt. No. 176 at 9. In prohibiting nationality-based discrimination in the issuance of immigrant visas, Congress also in effect prohibited nationality-based discrimination in the admission of aliens. “Congress could not have intended to prohibit discrimination at the embassy, but permit it at the airport gate.” Brief of Technology Companies as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 180 at 20. We do not suggest that visa holders must gain automatic entry into the United States, but rather, that visa holders cannot be discriminated against on the basis of “race, sex, nationality, place of birth, or place of residence” throughout the visa process, whether during the issuance of a visa or at the port of entry.¹⁹

Our conclusion that § 1152(a)(1)(A)’s non-discrimination mandate cabins the President’s authority under § 1182(f) is reinforced by other canons of statutory construction.

First, a later enacted, more specific statute generally governs over an earlier, more general one. See Antonin Scalia & Bryan A. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 183–87 (2012). Here, § 1152(a)(1)(A) was enacted in 1965, after § 1182(f) was enacted in 1952. Section 1152(a)(1)(A) is also more specific, and sets a limitation on the President’s broad authority to exclude aliens—he may do so, but not in a way that discriminates based on nationality. See RadLAX Gateway Hotel, LLC v. Amalgamated Bank, 132 S. Ct. 2065, 2071 (2012) (“The general/specific canon is perhaps most frequently applied to statutes in which a general permission or prohibition is contradicted by a specific prohibition or permission. To eliminate the contradiction, the specific provision is construed as an exception to the general one.”).

¹⁹ While a foreign national may properly obtain a visa, this does not guarantee entry into the United States because they may otherwise be inadmissible. See 8 U.S.C. § 1201(h) (“Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to entitle any alien, to whom a visa or other documentation has been issued, to be admitted to the United States.”); see also 8 U.S.C. § 1182 (listing the myriad ways an alien can be deemed inadmissible).

Second, § 1152(a)(1)(A) specifically identifies exemptions from the non-discrimination mandate, implying that unmentioned sections are not exempted. See United Dominion Indus., Inc. v. United States, 532 U.S. 822, 836 (2001) (“The logic that invests the omission with significance is familiar: the mention of some implies the exclusion of others not mentioned.”). Section 1152(a)(1)(A) explicitly exempts three different INA provisions from its application—8 U.S.C. §§ 1101(a)(27), 1151(b)(2)(A)(i), and 1153—all of which deal with giving preference to certain immigrants, such as family members of current citizens and permanent residents. Had Congress likewise intended to permit § 1182(f) to override § 1152(a)(1)(A)’s non-discrimination requirement, it would have done so in the same way it did for the other provisions.

The Government contends that §§ 1182(f) and 1185(a)(1) “have long been understood to permit the president to draw nationality-based distinctions.”

However, as discussed above, supra note 13, prior executive orders and proclamations did not suspend classes of aliens on the basis of national origin, but instead on the basis of affiliation or culpable conduct. See Kate M. Manuel, Executive Authority to Exclude Aliens: In Brief 6–10, Congressional Research Service (2017). The other instances cited by the Government are distinguishable. The executive order at issue in Sale v. Haitian Centers Council, Inc., 509 U.S. 155 (1993), made no nationality-based distinctions and concerned “suspend[ing] the entry of aliens coming by sea to the United States without necessary documentation.” Exec. Order No. 12807, 57 Fed. Reg. 23133 (May 24, 1992). President Carter’s executive orders in response to the Iranian hostage crisis delegated authority to the Secretary of State and the Attorney General to prescribe limitations governing the entry of Iranian nationals and did not ban Iranian immigrants outright. See Exec. Order 12172, 44 Fed. Reg. 67947 (Nov. 26, 1979), amended by Exec. Order 12206, 45 Fed. Reg. 24101 (Apr. 7, 1980). Finally, President Reagan’s Proclamation 5517 suspended the entry of Cuban nationals coming as immigrants, with some exceptions. 51 Fed. Reg. 30470 (Aug. 22, 1986). The proclamation did not exclude all foreign nationals, as exceptions were provided, and the proclamation was in response to Cuba’s decision “to suspend all types of procedures regarding the execution’ of the December 14, 1984, immigration agreement between the United States and Cuba.”²⁰ Id. To be clear, Presidents have invoked §§ 1182(f) and 1185(a)(1) to restrict certain aliens or classes of aliens from entering the United States, but EO2 is unprecedented in its scope, purpose, and breadth.

The Government also argues that the President may engage in discrimination on the basis of nationality because of the exception provided in § 1152(a)(1)(B). Section 1152(a)(1)(B) provides, “[n]othing in [§ 1152(a)(1)(A)] shall be construed to limit the authority of the Secretary of State to determine the procedures for the processing of immigrant visa applications or the locations where such applications will be processed.” However, this provision governs the Secretary of State’s manner and place for processing applications, not the President’s asserted ability to deny immigrant visas on the basis of nationality.

Having considered the President’s authority under § 1182(f) and the non-discrimination mandate of § 1152(a)(1)(A), we also conclude that Plaintiffs have shown a likelihood of success on the merits of their claim that Section 2(c) of the Order, in suspending the issuance of immigrant visas and denying entry based on nationality, exceeds the restriction of § 1152(a)(1)(A) and the overall statutory ²⁰ Because these executive actions were not challenged as violations of § 1182(f) or § 1152(a)(1)(A), “the judiciary [has not] address[ed] whether the order[s] complied with those provisions or the Constitution.” Int’l Refugee Assistance Project, 2017 WL 2273306, at *45 n.11 (Wynn, J., concurring).

scheme intended by Congress.

Aside from the President's failure to make the requisite findings to justify reducing the entry of refugees in fiscal year 2017 as an exercise of authority under § 1182(f), Plaintiffs contend that 8 U.S.C. § 1157 circumscribes the President's actions in setting the number of refugees to be admitted this fiscal year. We agree.

The Refugee Act of 1980 amended the INA "to provide a permanent and systematic procedure for the admission to this country of refugees of special humanitarian concern to the United States, and to provide comprehensive and uniform provisions for the effective resettlement and absorption of those refugees who are admitted." Pub. L. No. 96-212, § 101, 94 Stat. 102 (1980).

The Act requires that the President, after consulting with Congress, set the annual admission of refugees before the beginning of every fiscal year:

[T]he number of refugees who may be admitted under this section in any fiscal year . . . shall be such number as the President determines, before the beginning of the fiscal year and after appropriate consultation, is justified by humanitarian concerns or is otherwise in the national interest.

8 U.S.C. § 1157(a)(2). "Appropriate consultation" is defined as "discussions in person by designated Cabinet-level representatives of the President with members of the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and of the House of Representatives." Id. § 1157(e). After undergoing this process in 2016, President Obama determined that the admission of 110,000 refugees to the United States during fiscal year 2017 was justified by humanitarian concerns or otherwise in the national interest. See 81 Fed. Reg. at 70315. Section 6(b) of EO2 reduced the refugee admission cap for the same year to 50,000. See 82 Fed. Reg. at 13216.

The statute requires the President to set the number of annual refugee admissions (1) before the start of the new fiscal year, and (2) after appropriate consultation with Congress. The Government responds that § 1157 only refers to a ceiling—not the floor—for the number of refugees who may be admitted, and that §§ 1182(f) and 1185(a)(1) permit the President to lower the number of refugees permitted to enter.

We disagree. This interpretation reads out the language that the number of refugees who may be admitted shall be the number determined by the President. See 8 U.S.C. § 1157(a)(2). The Government's argument would require us to conclude that Congress set forth very specific requirements for the President to provide the number and allocation of the refugees to be admitted as justified by humanitarian concerns or the national interest, after appropriate consultation, only to permit the President to order a midyear reduction in the level of refugee admissions, and to do so without consulting Congress. Section 1157 contemplates that the President, after consultation with Congress, may increase the number of refugees admitted in the middle of the fiscal year, but does not provide a mechanism for the President to decrease the number of refugees to be admitted mid-year. See id. § 1157(b) (describing how, after appropriate consultation, the President may fix a number of additional refugees to be admitted to the United States).

Well-settled interpretive canons further explain why § 1182(f) does not give the President authority to override the requirements of § 1157. First, applying the “later in time” canon, § 1182(f) was adopted in 1952, and § 1157 was adopted in 1980, indicating that this subsequent statute shapes the scope of the President’s authority. See Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 529 U.S. at 143 (“The ‘classic judicial task of reconciling many laws enacted over time, and getting them to ‘make sense’ in combination, necessarily assumes that the implications of a statute may be altered by the implications of a later statute.’” (quoting United States v. Fausto, 484 U.S. 439, 453 (1988))).

Second, § 1157, the more specific provision, controls the more general § 1182(f). See id. (“This is particularly so where the scope of the earlier statute is broad but the subsequent statutes more specifically address the topic at hand.”); Radzanower v. Touche Ross & Co., 426 U.S. 148, 153 (1976). Section 1157 provides a very specific process for “appropriate consultation” that the President must follow before setting the number of refugees to be admitted to the United States that is justified by humanitarian concerns or is otherwise in the national interest. “Appropriate consultation” requires in-person discussions between cabinet-level representatives and members of Congress “to review the refugee situation or emergency refugee situation, to project the extent of possible participation of the United States therein, [and] to discuss the reasons for believing that the proposed admission of refugees is justified by humanitarian concerns or grave humanitarian concerns or is otherwise in the national interest” 8 U.S.C. § 1157(e). As part of the consultation, the Executive also must present the following information:

- (1) A description of the nature of the refugee situation.
- (2) A description of the number and allocation of the refugees to be admitted and an analysis of conditions within the countries from which they came.
- (3) A description of the proposed plans for their movement and resettlement and the estimated cost of their movement and resettlement.
- (4) An analysis of the anticipated social, economic, and demographic impact of their admission to the United States.
- (5) A description of the extent to which other countries will admit and assist in the resettlement of such refugees.
- (6) An analysis of the impact of the participation of the United States in the resettlement of such refugees on the foreign policy interests of the United States.
- (7) Such additional information as may be appropriate or requested by such members.

Id. According to the statute, this information would ideally be provided at least two weeks in advance of the discussions. Id.

Congress prescribed specific actions the President must take before setting the number of refugees who may be admitted as justified by humanitarian concerns or as otherwise in the national interest. See generally 8 U.S.C. § 1157. The President relied on § 1182(f)—an earlier and more general provision—to conclude that admission of refugees above 50,000 is detrimental to the interest of the United States. But § 1157, a “narrow, precise, and specific” statutory provision, may not be overridden by § 1182(f), a provision “covering a more generalized spectrum” of issues. Radzanower, 426 U.S. at 153–54; see also Nitro–Lift Techs., LLC v. Howard, 133 S. Ct. 500, 504 (2012) (explaining that the interpretive principle generalia specialibus non derogant means that “the specific governs the general” and applies to conflict between “laws of equivalent dignity”).

As a result, Plaintiffs have also shown a likelihood of success on the merits for their argument that Section 6(b) of EO2 conflicts with 8 U.S.C. § 1157.

Plaintiffs additionally argue that EO2 conflicts with 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(3)(B), which sets forth detailed and “specific criteria for determining terrorism-related inadmissibility.” Din, 135 S. Ct. at 2140.

EO2 attempts to eliminate the marginal risk of “erroneously permitting entry of a national of one of these countries who intends to commit terrorist acts,” 82 Fed. Reg. at 13211, by suspending entry of all nationals from the six designated countries. We need not decide the precise scope of § 1182(f) authority in relation to § 1182(a)(3)(B) because the President has not met the precondition to exercising his power under § 1182(f), that is, of making a detrimentality finding. We note, however, that executive action should not render superfluous Congress's requirement that there be a "reasonable ground to believe" that an alien "is likely to engage after entry in any [specifically defined] terrorist activity," 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(3)(B)(i)(II), and other specific grounds for terrorism-related admissibility. Cf. Abourezk, 785 F.2d at 1049 n.2 ("The President's sweeping proclamation power [under § 1182(f)] provides a safeguard against the danger posed by any particular case or class of cases that is not covered by one of the categories in section 1182(a).") (emphasis added); Allende v. Shultz, 845 F.2d 1111, 1118 (1st Cir. 1988) ("Each subsection [of § 1182(a)] creates a different and distinct ground for exclusion.").

Finally, we note that in considering the President's authority, we are cognizant of Justice Jackson's tripartite framework in Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer. See 343 U.S. 579, 635–38 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring). Section 1182(f) ordinarily places the President's authority at its maximum. "When the President acts pursuant to an express or implied authorization of Congress, his authority is at its maximum, for it includes all that he possesses in his own right plus all that Congress can delegate." Id. at 635. However, given the express will of Congress through § 1152(a)(1)(A)'s non-discrimination mandate, § 1157's procedure for refugee admissions to this country, and § 1182(a)(3)(B)'s criteria for determining terrorism-related inadmissibility, the President took measures that were incompatible with the expressed will of Congress, placing his power "at its lowest ebb." Id. at 637. In this zone, "Presidential claim to a power at once so conclusive and preclusive must be scrutinized with caution, for what is at stake is the equilibrium established by our constitutional system." Id. at 638. We have based our decision holding the entry ban unlawful on statutory considerations, and nothing said herein precludes Congress and the President from reaching a new understanding and confirming it by statute. If there were such consensus between Congress and the President, then we would view Presidential power at its maximum, and not in the weakened state based on conflict with statutory law. See id. at 635–38.

In sum, we conclude that Plaintiffs have shown a likelihood of success on the merits at least as to their arguments that EO2 contravenes the INA by exceeding the President's authority under § 1182(f), discriminating on the basis of nationality, and disregarding the procedures for setting annual admissions of refugees.²¹

²¹ Because this claim relates to EO2's conflict with the INA, we leave open whether and in what circumstances the President may suspend entry under his

The current record is sufficient to permit the court's evaluation of the irreparable harms threatening Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs identify harms, such as prolonged separation from family members, constraints to recruiting and attracting students and faculty members to the University of Hawai'i, decreased tuition revenue, and the State's inability to assist in refugee resettlement. Many of these harms are not compensable with monetary damages and therefore weigh in favor of finding irreparable harm. See, e.g., Washington, 847 F.3d at 1169 (identifying harms such as harms to States' university employees and students, separated families, and stranded States' residents abroad); Regents of Univ. of Cal. v. Am. Broad. Cos., Inc., 747 F.2d 511, 520 (9th Cir. 1984) (crediting intangible harms such as the "impairment of their ongoing recruitment programs [and] the dissipation of alumni and community goodwill and support garnered over the years"); cf. Moore v. City of E. Cleveland, Ohio, 431 U.S. 494, 503–04 (1977) (explaining that "the Constitution protects the sanctity of the family precisely because the institution of the family is deeply rooted in this Nation's history and tradition").

We conclude Plaintiffs are likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of inherent powers as commander-in-chief or in a time of national emergency. See, e.g., Legal Assistance for Vietnamese Asylum Seekers, 45 F.3d at 473.

preliminary relief.

In considering the equities of a preliminary injunction, we next “balance the competing claims of injury” and “consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief.” Winter, 555 U.S. at 24.

The district court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the balance of hardships tipped in Plaintiffs’ favor. The Government argues that the injunction causes direct, irreparable injury by constraining the Executive’s authority in “protect[ing] national security on behalf of the entire United States.”²² “[T]he Government’s interest in combating terrorism is an urgent objective of the highest order.” Humanitarian Law Project, 561 U.S. at 28. Nonetheless, the President must exercise his authority under § 1182(f) lawfully by making sufficient findings justifying that entry of certain classes of aliens would be detrimental to the national interest and ensuring that such exercise does not conflict with other INA provisions. Because the President has not done so, we cannot conclude that national security interests outweigh the harms to Plaintiffs. See Int'l Refugee Assistance Project, 2017 WL 2273306, at *32 (Keenan, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment).

Further, the Government has not put forth evidence of injuries resulting from the preliminary injunction, or how the screening and vetting procedures in place before the Order was enjoined were inadequate such that the Order should take immediate effect. Continuing to enjoin portions of EO2 restores immigration procedures and programs to the position they were in prior to its issuance. See Washington, 847 F.3d at 1168; see also Brief of Former National Security Officials as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 108 at 9 (explaining that a number of amici officials, in office on January 20, 2017 and current on active intelligence, knew of no “credible terrorist threat streams directed against the United States” at that time).

In weighing the harms, the equities tip in Plaintiffs’ favor.

Plaintiffs must finally show that preliminary injunctive relief is in the public interest.

National security is undoubtedly a paramount public interest. See Haig v. Agee, 453 U.S. 280, 307 (1981) (“[N]o governmental interest is more compelling than the security of the Nation.”).²³ Although we recognize that “sensitive and weighty interests of national security and foreign affairs” are implicated, Humanitarian Law Project, 561 U.S. at 33–34, the President must nonetheless exercise his executive power under § 1182(f) lawfully. The public interest is served by “curtailing unlawful executive action.” Texas, 809 F.3d at 187.

The public interests in uniting families and supporting humanitarian efforts in refugee resettlement support the conclusion that the public interest is served by preliminarily enjoining EO2 and maintaining the status quo. Cf. Solis-Espinoza v. Gonzales, 401 F.3d 1090, 1094 (9th Cir. 2005) (“Public policy supports

²³ Several amici contend that the Order not only serves no national security interest, but actually harms our security. See, e.g., Brief of Former National Security Officials as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 108 at 2 (explaining that the Order will harm the country’s national security and foreign policy interest: “It will endanger troops in the field, and disrupt key counterterrorism and national security partnerships. It will aid the propaganda effort of the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (“ISIL”) and support its recruitment message. By feeding the narrative that the United States is at war with Islam, the Order will impair relationships with the very Muslim communities that law enforcement professionals rely on to address the threat of terrorism. And it will have a damaging humanitarian and economic impact.”); Brief of Former Federal Immigration and Homeland Security Officials as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 176 at 20–21 (“[T]he Order weakens vetting protocols and procedures by using national-origin discrimination as a substitute for individualized threat assessments. The Order also threatens to fracture critical military, intelligence, and counterterrorism partnerships and hinder cooperation with the very communities with which law enforcement professionals work to disrupt terrorist plots.”); Brief of Doe Plaintiffs as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 276, Ex. G., U.S. Dep’t of State, Dissent Channel: Alternatives to Closing Doors in Order to Secure Our Borders (voicing the State Department officers’ concerns about EO1). A draft DHS report also concluded that citizenship “is unlikely to be a reliable indicator of potential terrorist activity.”

recognition and maintenance of a family unit. The [INA] was intended to keep families together. It should be construed in favor of family units and the acceptance of responsibility by family members.”); Kaliski v. Dist. Dir. of INS, 620 F.2d 214, 217 (9th Cir. 1980) (explaining that “the humane purpose” of the INA is to reunite families).

Amici also have identified specific harms that will result if EO2 takes effect, bolstering the conclusion that the injunction is in the public interest. They explain that EO2 would, inter alia: curtail children’s ability to travel to the United States to obtain life-saving medical care, see Brief of the Foundation for the Children of Iran and Iranian Alliances Across Borders as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 77; undermine the efforts of religious organizations in the United States rendering humanitarian aid, see Brief of Episcopal Bishops as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 204; and prevent U.S. citizens and lawful permanent residents from receiving visits from or reuniting with family members, see Brief of Human Rights First et al. as Amici Curiae, Dkt. No. 222.

The public interest favors affirming the preliminary injunction. See Winter, 555 U.S. at 24 (“In exercising their sound discretion, courts of equity should pay particular regard for the public consequences in employing the extraordinary remedy of injunction.”).

* * *

Plaintiffs have satisfied all four factors to warrant entry of the preliminary injunction. See id. at 20. The district court did not abuse its discretion in granting an injunction.

V

With respect to the injunction's scope, the Government contends that the district court erred by enjoining internal government procedures, giving nationwide relief, and entering an order against the President.

We review the scope of a preliminary injunction for abuse of discretion. McCormack v. Hiedeman, 694 F.3d 1004, 1010 (9th Cir. 2012). Although the district court has “considerable discretion in fashioning suitable relief and defining the terms of an injunction,” Lamb-Weston, Inc. v. McCain Foods, Ltd., 941 F.2d 970, 974 (9th Cir. 1991), there are limitations on this discretion. Injunctive relief must be tailored to remedy the specific harms shown by the plaintiffs. See id. (“Injunctive relief . . . must be tailored to remedy the specific harm alleged.”); Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 702 (1979) (“[T]he scope of injunctive relief is dictated by the extent of the violation established . . .”). “An overbroad injunction is an abuse of discretion.” Stormans, 586 F.3d at 1140.

The Government first argues that the injunction improperly enjoins enforcement of parts of Sections 2 and 6 that are unrelated to any alleged harm to Plaintiffs—specifically, the provisions that pertain to internal government operations and procedures.

Portions of Section 2 require various agencies to conduct a review of worldwide vetting procedures to determine what additional information, if any, is needed from each foreign country to adjudicate a visa application, prepare a report on the results of the worldwide review, submit a list of countries that do not provide requested information to the President, and recommend other lawful restrictions or limitations deemed necessary for the security of the United States. 82 Fed. Reg. at 13212–13. Likewise, during the interim period when refugee admissions is suspended, Section 6 directs the Secretary of State, in conjunction with the Secretary of Homeland Security and the Director of National Intelligence, to conduct an internal review and implement additional procedures identified by the review. Id. at 13215. Section 6 also requires the Secretary of State to review the “existing law” to determine how State and local jurisdictions could have greater involvement in the process of determining refugee placement. Id. at 13216.

Although other unenjoined sections of EO2 permit interagency coordination to review vetting procedures, the district court nonetheless abused its discretion in enjoining the inward-facing tasks of Sections 2 and 6. Enjoining the entirety of Sections 2 and 6 was not narrowly tailored to addressing only the harms alleged. For example, internal determinations regarding the necessary information for visa application adjudications do not have an obvious relationship to the constitutional rights at stake or statutory conflicts at issue here. Plaintiffs have not shown how the Government’s internal review of its vetting procedures will harm them. We vacate the preliminary injunction to the extent it enjoins internal review procedures that do not burden individuals outside of the executive branch of the federal government. See Bresgal v. Brock, 843 F.2d 1163, 1171 (9th Cir. 1987) (“An injunction against a government agency must be structured to take into account ‘the well-established rule that the government has traditionally been granted the widest latitude in the “dispatch of its own internal affairs.”’” (quoting Rizzo v.

Goode, 423 U.S. 362, 378–79 (1976)); cf. Bowen v. Roy, 476 U.S. 693, 700 (1986) (explaining that the Free Exercise Clause “affords an individual protection from certain forms of governmental compulsion [but] does not afford an individual a right to dictate the conduct of the Government’s internal procedures”).

The Government next argues that the district court erred in enjoining Section 6’s refugee provisions, specifically the suspension of refugees and adoption of the 50,000 refugee cap.

The State alleges that Section 6 will force it to abandon the refugee program that embodies the State’s traditions of openness and diversity. The State has several policies that aid and resettle refugees, and has a “long history of welcoming refugees impacted by war and oppression.” As discussed earlier, OCS, a division of the Department of Labor and Industrial Relations, is directed to “[a]ssist and coordinate the efforts of all public and private agencies providing services which affect the disadvantaged, refugees, and immigrants.” Haw. Rev. Stat. § 371K-4(5). OCS also operates the Refugee Social Services Program and the Refugee Cash and Medical Assistance Program. See Department of Labor and Industrial Relations, Office of Community Services, 2017 Hawaii State Plan for Refugee Assistance and Services (2016); <https://labor.hawaii.gov/ocs/files/2013/02/FY17-State-Plan-for-Hawaii.pdf> (last visited June 6, 2017). The State further highlights that aiding refugees is central to the mission of private organizations, like Catholic Charities Hawai‘i and Pacific Gateway Center.

Since fiscal year 2010, at least twenty refugees have arrived and resettled in Hawai‘i, and in fiscal year 2017 to date, three have resettled there. While this is a small number of refugees, it does not diminish Hawai‘i’s interest in effectuating its refugee programs and investments. Enjoining the suspension and cap would protect the State’s programs and efforts in resettling refugees.

Although the Government is correct in pointing out that most of Plaintiffs’ alleged injuries center on the implementation of Section 2(c), at this preliminary stage of litigation, the district court did not abuse its discretion by enjoining Section 6’s operative provisions suspending refugee admission on the basis of the current record. We therefore reject the Government’s challenge on this point.

The Government next contends that the district court erred by enjoining Section 2(c) as to all persons everywhere, rather than redressing only Plaintiffs’ injuries. The Government requests that the nationwide injunction be limited to Plaintiffs only.²⁴

²⁴ The Government also argues that to the extent § 1152(a)(1)(A) cabins executive authority, the injunction entered by the district court can only apply to immigrant visas and should not apply to nonimmigrant visas. We decline to narrow the injunction on the grounds proposed by the Government because, even assuming

The district court identified two reasons to support a nationwide injunction. First, the district court emphasized that in certain circumstances, it is appropriate for courts to issue nationwide injunctions. Hawai‘i PI, 2017 WL 1167383, at *8. As the Fifth Circuit observed in Texas v. United States, nationwide injunctions are particularly appropriate in the immigration context because “immigration laws of the United States should be enforced vigorously and uniformly.” 809 F.3d at 187–88; see U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 4 (“The Congress shall have Power . . . [t]o establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization”) (emphasis added). Enjoining the conduct as to Plaintiffs may result in “fragmented immigration policy [that] would run afoul of the constitutional and statutory requirement for uniform immigration law and policy.” Washington, 847 F.3d at 1166–67 (citing to Texas, 809 F.3d at 187–88)).

Second, the district court made clear that the Government did not provide a workable framework for narrowing the geographic scope of the injunction. See id. at 1167 (“[E]ven if limiting the geographic scope of the injunction would be desirable, the Government has not proposed a workable alternative form of the TRO that accounts for the nation’s multiple ports of entry and interconnected transit system and that would protect the proprietary interests of the States at issue here while nevertheless applying only within the States' borders.”). On appeal, the Government has not offered any new workable method of limiting the geographic scope of the injunction.

the Government is correct, the President failed to meet the precondition to exercising his authority under § 1182(f).

An “injunction is not necessarily made over-broad by extending benefit or protection to persons other than prevailing parties in the lawsuit—even if it is not a class action—if such breadth is necessary to give prevailing parties the relief to which they are entitled.” Bresgal, 843 F.2d at 1170–71. Narrowing the injunction to apply only to Plaintiffs would not cure the statutory violations identified, which in all applications would violate provisions of the INA. See Int’l Refugee Assistance Project, 2017 WL 2273306, at *27 (affirming the nationwide injunction because Section 2(c) of EO2 likely violates the Establishment Clause, and its constitutional deficiency “would endure” in all applications); cf. Nat’l Mining Ass’n v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng’rs, 145 F.3d 1399, 1409 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (“[W]hen a reviewing court determines that agency regulations are unlawful, the ordinary result is that the rules are vacated—not that their application to the individual petitioners is proscribed.” (quoting Harmon v. Thornburgh, 878 F.2d 484, 495 n.21 (D.C. Cir. 1989))).

The district court did not abuse its discretion in entering a nationwide preliminary injunction.

Finally, the Government argues that the district court erred by issuing an injunction that runs against the President himself. This position of the Government is well taken. Generally, we lack “jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties.” Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 802–03 (1992) (quoting Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. 475, 501 (1866)); see id. at 802 (“[I]njunctive relief against the President himself is extraordinary, and should . . . raise[] judicial eyebrows.”). Injunctive relief, however, may run against executive officials, including the Secretary of Homeland Security and the Secretary of State. See, e.g., Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., 343 U.S. at 588–89 (holding that President Truman did not act within his constitutional power in seizing steel mills and affirming the district court’s decision enjoining the Secretary of Commerce from carrying out the order); Franklin, 505 U.S. at 802–03.

We conclude that Plaintiffs’ injuries can be redressed fully by injunctive relief against the remaining Defendants, and that the extraordinary remedy of enjoining the President is not appropriate here. See Franklin, 505 U.S. at 803. We therefore vacate the district court’s injunction to the extent the order runs against the President, but affirm to the extent that it runs against the remaining “Defendants and all their respective officers, agents, servants, employees, and attorneys, and persons in active concert or participation with them.”

The district court did err in enjoining the entirety of Sections 2 and 6, particularly the portions that pertain to interagency review, despite the Government's requests for clarification and requests to narrow the injunction to enjoin conduct that actually harms Plaintiffs. The district court abused its discretion in enjoining inward-facing agency conduct because enjoining this conduct would not remedy the harms asserted by Plaintiffs. Further, the district court abused its discretion in enjoining the President. We would not be able to affirm in full the preliminary injunction even if Plaintiffs were also likely to succeed on their constitutional claims, for reasons that enjoining internal review procedures does not remedy harms to Plaintiffs and because it is improper to enjoin the President without necessity. As we have affirmed the injunction in part on statutory grounds, and vacated certain parts on the basis of considerations governing the proper scope of an injunction, we need not consider the constitutional claims here.

VI

We affirm in part and vacate in part the district court's preliminary injunction order. As to the remaining Defendants, we affirm the injunction as to Section 2(c), suspending entry of nationals from the six designated countries for 90 days; Section 6(a), suspending USRAP for 120 days; and Section 6(b), capping the entry of refugees to 50,000 in the fiscal year 2017. We vacate the portions of the injunction that prevent the Government from conducting internal reviews, as otherwise directed in Sections 2 and 6, and the injunction to the extent that it runs against the President. We remand the case to the district court with instructions to re-issue a preliminary injunction consistent with this opinion.²⁵

AFFIRMED in part; VACATED in part; and REMANDED with instructions. Each party shall bear its own costs on appeal.

²⁵ The Government's motion for a stay pending appeal is DENIED as moot.
