

Lauren Beyer

Director for Aviation and Surface Transportation Security

National Security Council

The White House

Lauren currently serves as the Director for Aviation and Surface Transportation Security at the National Security Council (NSC). In this capacity, she is the principal staff member of the Executive Office of the President responsible for the development and coordination of interagency policy on aviation and surface transportation security. Prior to joining the NSC staff, Lauren served as the Europe, Africa, Middle East Bureau Chief at the Transportation Security Administration (TSA), managing engagement with transportation security stakeholders across these regions and developing policies to mitigate risk from aviation security threats on flights to the United States. Lauren also served as the Chief of Strategy and Communications for TSA's Office of Global Strategies. Prior to joining TSA, she held various roles at the Department of Homeland Security including as a Senior Policy Advisor in the Visa Waiver Program Office, as well as the DHS Liaison to the European Union Presidency stationed in Budapest, Hungary followed by Warsaw, Poland. She has a Bachelor of Arts in Government from the University of Texas at Austin and a Master of Arts in American Government from Georgetown University.