Biography

David Contreiras Tyler advises issuers, underwriters, placement agents, and investors on public and private offerings of debt and equity securities, with a particular focus on capital markets and securitization transactions originating in Latin America. He easily adapts to structuring and advising on a wide range of financing solutions for corporate, sovereign, and financial institution clients.

David, a dual U.S. and Brazilian national, possesses native fluency in both English and Portuguese and a cultural understanding of Latin America, which enables him to provide effective counsel in transactions involving regional institutions.

Prior to joining Hogan Lovells, David practiced at other international law firms and as a lawyer at the Inter-American Development Bank in Washington, D.C. He draws on this experience when addressing legal and business concerns from a client's perspective and structuring innovative financing solutions.

Representative experience

Represented various Brazilian financial institutions in disclosure matters with respect to and issuances under medium-term note programs.
