Biography

Boyd Jackson draws on his in-depth education and experience with the economics of health policy and management to deliver innovative solutions to clients in the health and life sciences sectors.

Boyd has worked with leaders in the health field in academic and governmental institutions including the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services; the Los Angeles County Department of Public Health; the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA) Center for Health Advancement; and the Yale Global Health Leadership Institute. Boyd has conducted independent quantitative and qualitative research to advise policymakers on the health and economic impacts of various governmental interventions, and has worked with senior professors on pharmaceutical economics projects comparing pharmaceutical interventions with surgical procedures.

Boyd studied economics at Yale University, where he worked with a professor to prepare a book explaining the economic and social determinants of health outcomes. He continued his studies at the UCLA Fielding School of Public Health in the field of health policy and management with cognate studies in the political economics of the health sector. At Stanford University, Boyd was an editor for the Stanford Law & Policy Review and served clients in the school's
