The threat from terrorism will continue well into the next decade and every country and major organisation needs a counter-terrorism plan. This was the message from Richard Walton our key note speaker and former commander at New Scotland Yard and Head of the Counter Terrorism Command. The hotel industry needs to be vigilant and ensure in addition to physical security measures such as CCTV and protective bollards, time and money is invested in carrying out detailed risk assessments and, importantly, penetrative assessments (drills to work out how far into a hotel a terrorist attacker could venture before being stopped).
