

Hogan Lovells launches new Private Capital Industry Sector

20 July 2020

Update

Hogan Lovells has created a new industry sector focused on the needs of private capital investors.

The Private Capital Industry Sector brings together a cross-practice team of lawyers who advise all types of private capital investors including many of the largest and most sophisticated players in the industry - from 'traditional' funds to alternative investors - on their investment strategies across every asset class, industry, and geography.

New fund structures and an increase in diversified investment strategies have resulted in the continued rise of private capital – it has become a very large and rapidly growing market segment. It is now commonplace for private equity firms to operate debt-, real estate-, infrastructure- and energy-focused funds, alongside traditional PE or venture capital funds.

Independent private credit funds play a significant role in financing leveraged and corporate borrowers and sovereign wealth funds, pension funds and family offices are established market participants. Hedge funds and other direct and alternative investors in assets which are not publicly listed are growing in size, number and influence. Private capital investors often operate a number of funds focused on investing across a range of asset classes and industries.

Private capital investors will play an important role in the global economy's recovery as we emerge from the COVID-19 crisis. We have a strong and active client base across the private capital market. Our industry focus, combined with our market-leading regulatory capabilities and unique global network mean that we are well-positioned to help investors identify opportunities, deploy capital, and navigate any tax and regulatory issues that may arise in this challenging and rapidly-changing market environment.
