

The logo for Hogan Lovells, featuring the name in a serif font on a yellow-green background.

Hogan
Lovells

District Court in California recognizes plausible trademark rights over fictional Star Wars board game

15 May 2018

LimeGreen IP News

To assert a successful infringement claim relative to a mark that has arguably never been used as a source identifier for “real world” products, and which has not been actively promoted for nearly 40 years, is a challenge most trademark lawyers would back away from. For one, establishing trademark rights in a fictional product is itself a challenge, much less demonstrating continued consumer recognition of that mark despite a lapse of so many years since its “introduction.” But Lucasfilm is not a stranger to such challenges.

Click here to read the full article.

> Read the full article online