

Brittney Kohler

Program Director, Transportation and Infrastructure
National League of Cities

Brittney is the Program Director of Transportation and Infrastructure for the National League of Cities, advocating on behalf of 19,000 cities, towns, and villages across the United States. With more than a decade of experience in infrastructure policy and projects, she leads NLC's federal advocacy efforts to strengthen and modernize our nation's infrastructure in partnership with America's cities. Prior to joining NLC, she was the Deputy Press Secretary for the U.S. Department of Transportation and Senior Manager of Infrastructure Initiatives for the American Society of Civil Engineers, cultivating the widely cited Report Card for America's Infrastructure as well as a variety of state, local, and economic reports. Brittney began her career as an infrastructure analyst working on public-private partnerships and organizational restructurings in the rail, transportation, water, and aviation industries, as well as supporting the launch of a private equity infrastructure investment fund. She holds a Bachelor of Arts in Public Policy from Agnes Scott College.